"Ah!" exclaimed the doctor significantly while he kept his fingers still spanning Mr. Adrian's head, "and probably this is the first veeg monsieur has ever worn, though he has been belt for years?" Mr. Adrian was forced to admit the truth of the conjecture

Mr. Adrian was forced to admit the truth of the conjecture. "Ah!" exclaimed the doctor again; "the veeg has given heat to monsieur's brains and caused them to ferment. Voila!" and with these words the autocratic man of science, with a deft and rapid movement of his hand, plucked the wig from Mr. Adrian's head, and ere he could be prevent-ed throw it into the fire.

He told himself that he was only justly punished for acting upon the Vicar's advice. He was soon, however, forced to admit that the physician's prognostications had turned out correct, as no more, either when asleep or awake, did he meet with any of his recent experiences. But still the lovely face he had seen remained indelieved as firmly as ever that he must some day find her lived aimlessly in Paris, and, though he believed as firmly as ever that he must some day find her who was occupying most of his thoughts, he greemed to lack the energy or to be at a loss for a method, to enter upon his search. Sometimes, when in a picture gallery or at the theatre, and even on the bulevards, he would look around as if in search of some one whom he expected to see.

He was holding in his hand a small and exquisitely-painted enamel, a por-trait of the beautiful face which he had come from England to seek. "Who is this?" he inquired with an effort, for his volce seemed to come from one who was scant of breath. "I do not know," replied the dealer; "but monsieur will see that the portrait is very fine. The price is two hundred francs." Mr. Adrian at once paid the money. It was a moderate sum for so exquisite a work of art, but had ten times as much been asked the price would have been paid without demur. Mr. Ad-rian knew nothing about enamels, and after he had looked for some time with a rapt gaze he said: "How did it fall into your hands?"

"It was sold to me by a woman whom I do not know."
"Do you possess no information about it at all?"
"None. But I can give monsieur the address of a connoisseur who at least will be able to tell the artist," and the man then named one of the chief dealers in articles of virtu in Paris, from whom Mr. Adrian had frequently made purchases, and who was, therefore, known to him. He at once hurried to the shop.
"It is by D cazet, and very valuable," said the connoisseur as soon as he had seen the some.
"Where shall I find that artist?" asked Mr. Adrian, as though he were again breathes.
"Find Decazet! In his grave, monsieur. Decazet has been dead for a hundred years."
"A hundred years." exclaimed Mr. Adrian, repeating words that had fallen upon his heart like heavy weights and crushed it.

Mr. James Wilson, of the G T R shops in Stratford, wrote a letter on the 9th of December to the Worshipful Master of Hiram Lodge of Masons in Dunedin, New Zealand, inquiring the whereabouts of a sister he had not heard from for over 16 years. On Saturday last he received a letter from his sister, which bore the Ettrick, (New Zealand), post mark, dated 24th January, 1889. The letter stated that while she had undergone trials and vicissitudes during that time she was in good health and nad a bountiful supply of this world's cods.

The N G ruled the motion out of order on the ground of its being unconstitutional. An appeal was taken to the lodge, which appeal was sustained. The N G refused to put the motion, and the questioner asks if the N G is bound to obey the voice of the lodge. Answer, yes. To the question asked, "Can a lodge legally initiate a minister of the gospel free or for less than the amount prescribed by the by-laws," the answer is "No." Question: -"Can a lodge accept and initiate as a non-benefit member a minister of the gospel, or any other person, who, on account of age or ill-health, it would hesitate to accept as a benefit member ?" Of Kellar's new trick, "Astarte," it is said that the curtains are drawn aside and a figure clad in white stands against a black background. One finger lifts the figure four feet from the ground and there in the air it reposes, walks, dances, assumes disguises and does tricks like an athlete on a horizontal bar. Of course you know a dozen different ways the trick is being done; before it is finished every one of those explanations is exploded

Frederick Archer, the critic and organist, tells a New York writer that he has given up musical journalism forever. "It was seductive," he said, speaking of the *Key-*note, "but it didn't pay. I intend to locate in the West, at Milwaukee. It is wonderful to what a point of development musical taste has advanced in the Western country. They know a good deal more about music there than in the East, for they cultivate it seriously and intelligently. I went through Manitoba recently and the ripe musical knowledge of the people with whom I came in contact was simply amazing."

Without speaking another word and with a look on his face of blank despair, Mr. Adrian left the shop. Acting almost involuntarily, and scarcely knowing what he did, he went straight to the shop of the perruquier from whom his wig had been procured. On the account which had been sent to him from London the French barber was named, so he knew where to go. "I am come," said Mr. Adrian to the per-ruquier, "to make some inquiries regarding a wig that was made by you and sent to London two months ago." "A flaxen-colored perruque made for an Eng-lish milord?" "It was made for me. I wish to know where the hair came from of which it was made."

The barber shrugged his shoulders, but did not attempt to reply.

The barber shrugged his shoulders, but did not attempt to reply. "I paid what appeared to me a very high price for it," said Mr. Adrian, "but I will willingly give you the same amount again if you can tell me its history." "Very good. The bargain is made. Monsieur has rightly conjectured that a strange history pertains to that perruque. First, then, monsieur must know that the hair was that of a lady. The very beautiful hair was stained and had, there-fore, unfortunately, to be cut short, and so was suitable only for a purpose such as that for which it was used. The stains were unfortunate, or the hair would have fetched ten times the price charged to monsieur. Such beautiful hair to be so stained!" "Stained! How?" "With blood, monsieur," replied the barber, lowering his voice. Mr. Adrian said nothing, and after a pause the speaker continued:

He has been a ter-rible sufferer during the last seven years men of the Guard, but Miss Lamont and from Bright's disease, and had evidently become discouraged and utterly tired of life. On Wednesday morning about 11 o'clock he barred himself in a small sitting-room in connection with his bed-room and prepared to make away with himself. His wife came to the door and tried to force it but he kept it closed against her. Tak ing a razor he bent over a basin and with his head leaning against the wall gashed his throat first from one side and then from the other, almost from ear to ear, and also in his desperation tore open the wound. Thinking he had finished the deed he staggered out into the other room, bleeding fearfully, to the consternation of his family. Medical attendance was quickly summoned, and in the afternoon the wound was sewn up. The cut had not been made deep enough to cause death. The patient lies in a very critical state, however, and between his disease and the frightfully gashed throat the issue is doubtful. Mr. Grauel is aged 65 years and has a wife and family of eleven children, all well-to-do and respected.
