These men, report says, have a retreat open to them in parliament buildings, and their seats there are better kept than their seats in the house. The excitement of the card table, want of proper rest, and the indulgence and excessive habits of eating and drinking lead up to inevitable consequences; the lamentable event of last Friday afternoon in the legislative chamber points a moral that he who runs may read. The reverses sustained by the British troops in South Africa do not call forth sympathy in any quarter. The feeling is almost universal that the Boers had a substantial grievance, and that the British colonists have displayed towards them a very meddlesome spirit. This feeling prevails even in the office of the secretary for the colonies, and it has been pretty plainly intimated that the burden of getting out of the scrape must fall mainly on those whe got into it. The Boers deserved other treatment at the hands of British freemen, and the pluck they have shown in the present contest is worthy of admiration.
