Silcott, cashier to the House of Representatives, with a defalcation supposed to be about $100,000. It was on Thursday last that the announceinon the House like a thunderclap; and by the sensation. On motion an investigating committee was named by the Speaker to re-fort to-day (Monday.) The loss falls on the lectively, as well as on members individually. The following details we take

The extremely loose business methods toler Age extended loss of the Boune in all its dealings with the Sergeant-at-Arm's office made defalcation easy and tempting for Silcott. It has been the custom for the Sergeant-at-Arms to draw the and tempting for Sitcott. It has been the custom for the Sergeant-at-Arms to draw the monthly pay of the representatives, each member giving a receipt in advance, certified by the Speaker or the Clerk, to be presented at the Treasury. The salary becomes due on the fourth day of each month, but the Sergeant-at-Arms, or his cashier, has generally been permitted to get the receipts cashed from three to eight days in advance. Most members keep an account with the office, and have settlements when they wish, the Sergeant-at-Arms doing a sort of private banking business of over a million a year, but giving a bond of only $50,000. Silcott, Mr. Leedon's cashier, had the run of all these disbursements, and used to go in person to the Treasury to get the monthly receipts cashed. This time he went salaries each month is about $135,000.

On Nov. 27, Silcott took certificates for about $36,000 to Treasurer Huston. He explained that the office had no balance on hand, and that representatives were beginning to glow the property of the salaries and the presentatives were beginning to glow the property of the property

The conviction was made under section 2 of le act, which is as follows:

Every one who makes, prints, advertises or publishe or causes or procures to be funde, printed, advertise or published, any proposal, sehene or plant for advanting, lending, giving, selling or in any way disposing any property, either real or personal, by lost, early tickets or any mode of chance whateoever; or sell barters, exchanges or otherwise disposes of, or cause or produces, or aids or assists, in the sale, barter, or change or other disposal of; or ofters for sale, barter of the disposal of the di

Mr. Lount opened the arguments for the accused by explaining the business done by the company. He took exception to the information as being insufficient to support the conviction. He argued that the transaction of defendant consisted in the selling of tea at its fair value and that the property thus wested in the purchaser, and he could sell it back and repurchase or dispose of it as he pleased. There was a sale not of a chiance but a certainty, viz., a pound of tea.

Mr. Bigelow confined his argument to the particular words 'lot, card or ticket," could not be enlarged by subsequent general words of the Tea Company was a means of advertising and of introducing their choice blends of tea.
