

Miscellaneous.

A Siberian Forwarding Prison. From George Kennan's account of 'The Prison and Prisons of Western Siberia' in the June Century we quote the following: 'The Tumen prison was originally built to hold 500 prisoners, but was subsequently enlarged by means of detached barracks so that it could accommodate 800. On the day of our visit, as we were informed by a small blackboard hanging beside the office door, it contained 1741. As we approached the entrance we were stopped by an armed sentry, who, upon being informed that we desired admittance, shouted through a square porthole in the heavy gate, 'Star-sho-ee-ee!' (the usual call for the officers' messes) (the usual call for the officers' messes) (the usual call for the officers' messes)

Two Kinds of Courage.

General Horace Porter contributes an article to the June Century on 'The Philosophy of Courage,' from which we quote as follows: 'Indifference to danger is not always the form of courage which should exalt its possessor to the highest credit. It is a negative virtue as compared with the quality which enables one to perform a dangerous duty while realising the full measure of the peril encountered. These two traits are best illustrated by the story of the two soldiers whose regiment was charging up a hill in a desperate attempt to capture a battery. When half-way up, one of them turned to the other and said, 'Why, you're pale as a sheet, you look like a ghost. I believe you're afraid.' 'Yes, I am,' was the answer; 'and if you were half as much afraid as I am you'd have run away long ago. It is something higher than physical courage, it is a species of moral courage, a sense of the danger and of the overmastering sense of fear. When the famous mine in front of Petersburg had been completed and the National troops drawn up ready to charge the enemy's works at noon the mine had been up in creating a breach, the signal was given just before daylight, the fuse was lighted, and the command stood waiting with its long necks of blue and yellow cloth swayed upon the back between the shoulders. Nearly all of them wore leg-ladders, and the air was filled with a peculiar clinking of chains which suggested the continuous jingling of innumerable bunches of keys. 'The first "kamers" or cell that we entered was situated in a one-story log barn standing against the wall on the left of the gate, and built evidently to receive the overflow from the crowded main building. The room was about 35 feet in length by 25 in width and 12 feet high; its walls of heavy logs were covered with dirty white wash; its rough plank floor was planked with dried mud and hard-trodden slat, and it was lighted by three dark windows looking out into the prison yard. There in the center of the room, and cupping about half its width, ran the sleeping-bench—a wooden platform 12 feet wide and 30 long, supported, at a height of 2 feet from the floor, by stout posts. Each longitudinal end of the platform stopped a little, roof-wise, from the center, so that when the prisoners slept upon it in two closely packed transverse rows, their heads in the middle were a foot or more higher than their feet at the edges. These sleeping-places are known as "peres" and a Siberian prison cell contains no other furniture except a large wooden tub for excrement. The prisoners have neither pillow, blanket, nor bed clothing, and must lie on these hard plank naves with no covering but their overcoats. As we entered the cell the convicts, with a sudden jingling of chains, sprang to their feet, removed their caps, and stood silently in a dense throng around the naves. 'Zdrastvui rebati!' ("How do you do, boys!" said the warden. 'Zdravie rebati!' replied the convicts. "How do you do, boys!" said the warden. 'Zdravie rebati!' replied the convicts. "How do you do, boys!" said the warden. 'Zdravie rebati!' replied the convicts. "How do you do, boys!" said the warden. 'Zdravie rebati!' replied the convicts.

Good Thing to Know.

Remove stains from cups and saucers by scouring with fine coal ashes. Cast iron stoves and ironware should be heated gradually the first time they are used. Several pains in the bowels and stomach are often speedily relieved by the application of a bag of hot salt. When wholeness can be restored and used again by simply soaking in water a few hours and then drying them. A good substitute for butter milk in cooking is a thin batter made of flour and tepid water, and allowed to remain long enough to sour. Not only about mattresses be turned and aired at least three times a week, but pillows and bolsters ought to be fresh, shaken and exposed to the fresh air. When molasses is used in cooking it is a great improvement to boil and skim it before using. The raw, rather unpleasant taste of the poor qualities of molasses is much improved by this process. Ink stains are entirely removed by the immediate application of dry salt before the ink has dried. When the salt becomes discolored by absorbing the ink, it may be renewed by washing it with water. For moquito or gnat bites an experienced traveler writes that he used a solution of salt water as a strong remedy, as it can be used, adding one drop of glycerine. Shake well before using. It will instantly cure the bite. When baby was sick, we gave her Castoria. When she was a child, she relied on Castoria. When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria. When she had children, she gave them Castoria.
