

OBITUARY.

A prominent missionary and hard working clergyman has been lost to the Canadian Church by the sudden death of Rev. Dr. O'Meara, rector of St. John's Church, Port Hope, and one of the Canons of Toronto Diocese. For twenty years he was a missionary to the Indians of Manitoulin Island and other parts of the wild region now known as Algoma, and labored amongst them with great faithfulness and zeal, assisted by his heroic wife. He translated portions of Scripture into their language and taught them incessantly the Gospel of Christ. For the latter portion of his life he was Rector of Port Hope, where he built a handsome church, school house and rectory. Scholarly (being a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin) and genial, he was beloved by his people, and his funeral which took place in Port Hope on the 20th of December was attended by large crowds of people of all kinds and forms of religion. Three of his sons are clergymen, following the profession of their honored father. Though over seventy years of age he seemed strong and vigorous and his unexpected death was a great shock to many.

ONE hundred nations lie east of the Soudan, embracing 100,000,000 people without a missionary.

DEAR BRETHREN,—

Once more we, the bishops, clergy and laity, composing the Board of Management of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Church of England in Canada, appeal to the loyal sons and daughters of the Church on behalf of Foreign Missions. We make the appeal so that it will reach all at a time when the minds of Christian people are being directed towards the infant

Saviour and his first manifestation to the Gentiles or people of foreign lands. We would lead your thoughts back, not only to the infancy of the great Head of the Church, but to the infancy of the Church itself.

The history of the early preachers of the Gospel, as recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, is but a missionary history throughout. Missionary journeys, missionary prayers and speeches, missionary sufferings and dangers, missionary hopes and triumphs are the leading features of that one only book which describes the rise and progress of the Church of Apostolic days. It was by "the journeyings often" that the great Apostle to the Gentiles preached the unsearchable riches of Christianity. And it was by a continuation of this primitive work that Christianity was planted in distant parts of the great Roman Empire and within the Imperial city itself, until, in fact, it became the established religion of the realm, and was subsequently carried to those parts of the world where it is known and recognized to-day.

Active and aggressive work has proved the prolific source of true vitality in the Christian Church from her earliest days till now, and the absence of that work has always resulted in various forms of apathy and unbelief.

Therefore, the clear duty of the Church at the present hour is, what it has always been, the conversion of the heathen world to the peaceful and elevating principles of the everlasting Gospel. There can be no greater mistake made by any Church or congregation than to rest contented with meeting the claims of its own home work, however urgent those claims may be. Again and again this point must be pressed upon all, bishops, clergy and laity alike. Such is but a part only of the work of Christ's Church. It can never be that any Church or congregation is performing its whole duty by merely endeavoring to keep alive work which has already been established. It is by a spirit quite the reverse of this that Christianity is to flourish and grow. In fact the very maintenance of the Church depends upon its aggressive work against the powers of darkness and degradation. And where are those powers more clearly seen than in the vast realms of heathenism? Surely there is cause for the Church of Christ to feel bitter shame that, close upon the dawn of the twentieth century, there are in the world 856 millions of heathen, to say nothing of Mohammedans and Jews, while Christians of all shades and beliefs number but 390 millions!—390 millions as against 1,034 millions that are not even nominally Christian! We plead to-day for all these millions, dying without Christ, at the rate of 100,000 a day. We plead for their enlightenment, for their release from cruel and degrading customs, for the education of their children in the ways of civilization and the saving power of Christ and for the emancipation of their women from their cruel state of slavery.

The doors are now open everywhere for missionary labors. Resistance to the preaching of the
