The greatest of men are but fractions of men. No one is endowed with all gifts. Every one has his own particular excellence or ability. No two have precisely the same gifts, and no two are called to fill precisely the same place in life.

A valuable decision bearing upon the moral interests of Indiana has recently been rendered by the Supreme Court of that State. Opposition was made to the establishment of a saloon upon a street occupied solely by private residences, and the Supreme Court holds that while the liquor business is constitutional, it is immoral, and is licensed under specific conditions, in order that the people may have a legal safeguard against the danger of the unrestricted sale of liquor.
