

IT IS IN THE GOLDEN summer time that the inclination to relax becomes too strong to be resisted. When the buds have begun to blossom, when the days are golden, and the nights a glory of moonlight and of starlight, it is then that nature's playtime begins, that mankind shakes off the dull round of duty, work becomes a burden, one's whole being cries out for rest and change.

WHERE TO GO is the question which vexes many, but not those who have visited the St. Lawrence River region around Abenakis Springs, where there is health in every breath, and vigor in the long hours out of doors—boating, bathing, walking, riding or driving through the wide open country, where the ever-changing landscape offers, one after another, views of surpassing loveliness, until it seems that nature, even in this favored land, must have exhausted her charm.

ABENAKIS SPRINGS has many advantages to offer. Its situation is ideal in summer, being free from the scorching heat that makes midsummer a time to be dreaded. In this beautiful lake and river country, summer is a period of coolness and comfort, either pleasant and agreeable to the invalid or full of attractiveness to the healthy and vigorous. Its environments are superb, and for many years it has been the favored resort for the people of Canada. It is in the summer, when tired humanity must have rest, that Abenakis Springs region is most alluring, most beautiful; when the verdure is in its fullest luxuriance, the streams the clearest and most sparkling, the woods and fields most inviting.
