

APPENDIX.

GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES

WITH THEIR PRONUNCIATION.

WITH two or three exceptions, the notation used in the Dictionary, has been scrupulously followed in accenting the annexed list of geographical names.

1. That as many names as possible might be inserted within the space allotted to this portion of the book, the silent letters in a large number of words are italicised; thus obviating the necessity of spelling their pronunciation, and at the same time saving the space which that process would have required.

2. When, from the excess of vowel sounds noted in a word, it was not practicable to indicate the place of the secondary accent, as in the Dictionary, by a mark over the vowel in the syllable to which that accent belongs, it has been noted by using a distinct character—thus: Ā-gān'-is-tān'.

3. When a name is followed by one or more names enclosed in parentheses, these, though of like pronunciation, are to be understood as different modes of writing the first.

In all cases, words beginning with a small letter, indicate the pronunciation only—thus: Arezo, ā-rē'tso; Ā-jān' or ā-zhān'.

In accordance with the views and practice of writers generally on the pronunciation of the French language, no accented syllable has been designated in French names that occur in the following list. That, however, they may not be pronounced too slightly or indistinctly, as is usually the case with unaccented syllables in English, particular attention should be paid to the enunciation of the vowel sounds.
