QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY A STUMBLING BLOCK.

Queen's University, Kingston, is now having a sort of love-fever. Some pleasant things will be said about the good spirit that prevails at Queen's, and the achievements of graduates of the University, and they will be true. It is also true, however, that the denominational university is an enemy ally to religion and to education. In both fields it causes waste and dissipation of energy and resources. In both fields concentration of energy and resources is urgently called for. All the tendencies of the day are against the small university. The new scientific buildings in the Queen's Park, hour witness to the necessities created by the advance of science. The scientific equipment of a university is enormously expensive, and is growing more expensive every year. Institutions like Queen's simply cause a waste of the money that ought to be concentrated on scientific education.

In the religious field the necessity for concentration is equally apparent. Leaders of all the religious denominations are talking about the need for churches and missions in the west, and they are right. We are constantly hearing or reading of sermons on social or political topics, in which we are told that religion is the key to the social and political problems of the day. Surely all this points to the need of concentration of religious forces. It is even said that force is wasted by denominational divisions, and that there should be a union of the churches, at least for certain purposes. In view of this, how absurd it is for the Presbyterian Church to try to teach physical science as it is virtually doing today at Queen's.

What is the real opinion of Presbyterians on this question of the rank and file of the church? Both as citizens of Ontario and as members of the Presbyterian Church, their money is being wasted in an attempt to do what can be better done by non-denominational agencies. The friends of Trinity have seen the futility of this policy, and have decided to devote their energies to the teaching of theology and kindred subjects, and to strengthen the hands of the provincial university for the teaching of science and other subjects. They have decided on a policy of concentration, both for religious work and for educational work. The Anglicans, once the strongest advocates of denominational education, are forced by the logic of facts to abandon the idea. The Presbyterians, with a reputation for hard-headed, practical wisdom, with a high appreciation of the value of education, with a full recognition of the religious needs of the west, are being led into a false and reactionary position, wasting alike their educational and their religious resources.

Do they really approve of this position?

AN HISTORICAL STRUGGLE.

At first sight the British political field presents rather a confused spectacle. If every one of the leading combatants is not a rival of the Wyndham-Fisher group, his own hand—there is at least an infinity of independent opinion—evident and varied by the rank and file. In one sense it is refreshing to witness a really great issue submitted for decision to a whole nation. That fact alone raises the controversy above the merely party interests, however "trick" there may mingle with it. Whatever may be the result it is in itself an elevating and educative influence. It familiarizes the mass of the people with principles that underlie the superficial party badges and brings home to them something of the complexities and perplexities which beset the path of responsible statesmen entrusted with the guidance of a nation through the mazes of modern interstate relations.

It becomes increasingly evident that public opinion in Great Britain is shaping itself into five distinct divisions. On the extreme right stands the remnant of the old brigade of protectionists pure and simple, of whom the Rt. Hon. Henry Chaplin is the leader, or perhaps more accurately the heavy flyer. Mr. Chaplin is the beau ideal of a true blue English squire, to whom the land and its interests are not only the supreme but the only cause worth fighting for. He held office under Lord Salisbury, was first president of the Board of Agriculture, and then president of the Local Government Board, and latterly Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. To his great and openly expressed chagrin and disgust he was shunted during one of the partial reconstructions of the cabinet and has since been an independent and somewhat acerbic member of the government. At the Sheffield convention of Conservative organizers he made a strong attempt to carry a riding amendment in favor of a grain duty, and had the sympathy of a motley—possibly a majority—of the meeting. But this party, the capable of much noise and valuable as an ally, cannot by itself be regarded as a serious factor in the present controversy.

Second from the right comes the party of Mr. Chamberlain, who as all now know, supports import duties on manufactured products for retaliatory purposes and grain duties for the encouragement of imperial federation. This section is the dark horse of the race. It echoes in, by long odds, the most skilful, astute and stout-hearted pilot, thoroly realises its position, speaks for himself, but he certainly would never consent to give away a single inch of territory he believed to be British.

What is meant is that Mr. Aylesworth regards his position as purely judicial, not political or diplomatic. It is conceivable that for political reasons a member of the tribunal might decide either for or against his own country. What we have all been afraid of is that political considerations might make the American commissioners too favorable to the American contention, and the British commissioners too much inclined to yield.

Mr. Aylesworth is trying to assure us that he would not be so influenced.

In this country and at this time of the year, one of our most notable moths for being in a thankful mood. The signs of plenty are all about us, and in field, orchard and market, place the kindly fruits of the earth are displayed in abundance. In the bracing air, in the beauty of the sky, the sun and the moon, the stars, the clouds and the earth, there is a subtle suggestion that some power is working for us, something quiet, gracious, beneficent, like the kindnesses of the family circle.

This is the true source of the thanksgiving spirit; not the number of bushels of wheat, nor the store of food, nor yet the comparison of our own condition with that of people in less happy circumstances. The poor and the oppressed of all nations have as good a right to happiness as we, and the contrast should arouse in us only sadness and wonder and desire to do something to lighten the world's burden of sorrow. Whatever is given to us, above and beyond the common lot of men, is given in trust, that we may follow the example of affectionate care that is shown toward ourselves. Our thanks are due not so much for food and drink and shelter as for the divine affection of which they are the evidences.

Oh yet we trust that somehow good will be the final goal of all our toils and pains, and that, in the end, the world will be a better place, and that, in the end, the world will be a better place, and that, in the end, the world will be a better place.

It has been demonstrated that countries which have dissimilar products may enter into friendly trade relations with advantage to both parties. The Americans are our rivals. The State of New York and the Province of Ontario have similar products. So with the Canadian Northwest and the American Northwest. Free interchange of commodities between these communities would not be disadvantageous. But the Globe has long contended that reciprocity between Canada and the United States would be a profitable arrangement. It would be as reasonable to argue that Britain would be benefited from reciprocity with Germany, the two have like products. Britain and Germany are natural commercial enemies, just as France and England are natural commercial friends.

There is no reason why Britain and Canada should not have more intimate trade relations with advantage to both parties. Canada is prepared to scale down her tariff on the manufactured products of Great Britain in return for a preference on Canadian farm produce in her market. If this is the duty could be raised to meet their requirements. The scheme can be worked out. When the general principles have been decided, it will be time enough to enter into the discussion of details.

There is not enough lumber in Hon. Joseph Chamberlain's platform to suit John Charlton, M.P.

Hon. Joseph Chamberlain is ill, but he has closed a campaign that has left his political enemies in anything but the best of health.

The cost of taking the census in 1901 was undoubtedly heavy. But it must be remembered that people were very hard to find in Ontario.

collected with our old friends and judges, and declared that his mind was already made up. The corrected version of his remark is as follows:

"Being asked a few days ago whether there was any likelihood that the decision of the tribunal would be influenced by diplomatic considerations, Mr. Aylesworth replied, speaking for himself, that he certainly would never consent to give away a single inch of territory he believed to be British."

What is meant is that Mr. Aylesworth regards his position as purely judicial, not political or diplomatic. It is conceivable that for political reasons a member of the tribunal might decide either for or against his own country. ## MUNICIPAL MATTERS.

The Board of Control yesterday recommended that an abstract of the year's estimates for the information of the citizens be prepared and published. The Board of Control, which is the governing body of the city, has the honor of giving the controllers, Council and public such a statement as is now asked for, and has decided some time ago to renew the practice next year. It was dropped, as the World well remembers, because the Board of Control, being often incapable of dealing with the estimates in a rapid and business-like way, would have made a mess of the estimates and disbursements, which nothing else than the annual report of the Treasurer's Department could present to the public.

Ald. Curry's attack upon the Treasurer's report on Monday last must have been a novel experience for Mr. Curry. Mr. Curry, who is a member of the Board of Control, is a man of high character and high ability, and is a member of the Board of Control, which is the governing body of the city. He is a man of high character and high ability, and is a member of the Board of Control, which is the governing body of the city.

Now that public attention has been directed to the Treasurer's report, it is unusual way it may be well to refer to some of its distinctive merits. It is a scientific and comprehensive statement of the financial affairs of the city, and is a valuable document for the citizens to read. The statements of local improvement expenditure are fully detailed every year. The details of the expenditure are given in a clear and concise manner, and are a valuable document for the citizens to read.
