"It is a curious sight," said Dr. S. Morley Wickett, in an interesting ad-dress before the Canadian Institute on Saturday night on technical education,

Saturday night on technical curcation, "to see the important positions in our factories filled by foreigners. Both organized labor and business men have pointed out that there are at present no means by which our boys and girls can learn a trade, that our schools train rather for jobs than for work, and that Canadian workmen are res:less and dissatisfied with conditions, and in the absence of a satisfactory industrial outlook naturally turn to politics for relief."

Like the United States, Canada, he said, was becoming more and more directly dependent on export trade in order to secure a steady market and skilled help was a pressing necessity. The lecturer emphasized the point that technical education did not mean
