An Ice-House.

It will soon be time for those who are without an ice-house to be preparing one. No well-appointed farm or summer residence should be without this luxury any more than without a well or a good spring of water. It is not only a great comfort, but a means of economy in preserving meats and fruits in the heat of the summer, while one that will answer every purpose may be put up and filled at a trifling expense. No elaborate house is necessary for preserving the ice. There are some requirements, however, that must be attended to.

First, good drainage must be secured without giving the air access to the ice through the drain. If the soil is porous, or gravelly, no artificial drainage is required. It is not essential that the ice be stored underground, as it keeps quite as well above the surface. The ice should be compactly packed and enclosed with packed sawdust, or tan-bark, on all sides, and on the top to the depth of at least twelve inches. This packing is the great preservative of the ice. Ventilation must be given from the top and not allowed to pass through the ice. The larger the body of ice stored the better it will keep. The ice-house should not be less than twelve feet square on the inside, and eight feet high. A few square rods of ice will suffice to fill an ordinary house, and the depth of water need not be more than three feet.

A writer says: "My ice-house is built entirely on the surface of the ground. The only drainage is the natural slope of the surface, which is about one foot in six. It is fourteen feet square on the outside, and the posts are ten feet high. The walls are double, with eight-inch space filled with tan-bark. The roof is also double. Inside the outside covering hemlock. I first spread three or four inches of gravel on the ground, then ten inches of sawdust. I pack sawdust between the ice and wall, and cover it a foot deep on top. The north gable end of the house is open all the while for ventilation. The ice wastes but a trifle."—Forest and Stream.

Land Draining.

The experience of Mechi and many others in England, and of Waring and others in this country, has taught that the depth of four feet, a pitch of one inch in ten feet, and a good discharge at all times and seasons are desirable. The depth of four feet gives a drain which will operate at all times, even in the coldest of our New England winters; it admits of a deeper and more perfect action of the frost in winter, and provides for its earlier departure in spring; it provides innumerable channels for the escape of water to a depth beyond the point where its presence is injurious, and furnishes channels for the admission of the air into the soil. We find by careful examination that the same channels which carry the water to the drains from the adjacent soil serve, when not occupied in that office, as conduits, whereby the atmosphere enters and aerates the ground at a depth to which its influence has never before penetrated. We further find that the roots of several kinds of grasses have extended in the vicinity of the drains to a much greater depth than upon the ground of the same character not undrained, and that the growth of the plants is in ratio to that of the roots. It also appears that since the introduction of the underdrains timely, red-top, and especially clover, thrive to a gratifying extent upon very low, flat heavy clay, which formerly produced only an almost worthless variety of water-grasses. We are satisfied that a rainfall of one inch is immediately rendered to such an extent, that never for a moment is the effect of stagnation, water exerted upon the roots of plants in a space of at least forty feet on each side of an efficient drain.

The wonderful progress of agriculture in the West during the last quarter of a century, may be gathered from the fact that Minnesota, according to reliable statistics, where in 1850 only 3,000 acres were under cultivation, and the production was 1,400 bushels of wheat, 6,000 of corn, and 16,000 of oats there were in 1875 1,816,418 acres under cultivation, and the products aggregated 31,475 bushels of wheat, 15,775,000 bushels of oats, and 8,500,000 bushels of corn.
