Merchant And Fishermen

Their Interests Identical

"It is dreadfully easy to be a phool—a man can be one and not know it," said Josh Billings, and when we read Editor Coaker's remarks in the last issue of the Fishermen's Advocate regarding our editorial of the previous week the above "affirmation" of the American humorist occurred to us.

Feeling that some attempt to break the force of our remarks on his anti-Mercantile campaign was necessary, he launched out in one of his usual tirades. Who but W. F. Coaker would declare that the "fishermen's interests and the merchants interests are opposed, and will never harmonize." Every sane man who knows anything at all of conditions connected with the prosecution of the fisheries in this country knows well enough that the interests of no two classes of people engaged in any industry or business is more identical than that of the fisherman and merchant. It is in its very essence a partnership of mutual trust, mutual reliance and mutual responsibility.

The success of the supplier depends solely and wholly upon the success and honesty and reliability of the fisherman. We speak now of the cod, herring and lobster fisheries. The merchants must of necessity place trust and confidence in the fisherman. Without that confidence in the fisherman the merchant would not advance them supplies, and without the supplies the bulk of our fishermen could not prosecute the fisheries.

The failure of the fisherman means the failure, sooner or later, of the merchants who supplied them. So intimately, indeed, are their interests interwoven that the success of the one is, generally speaking, the success of the other. We speak now of the fisherman as a body, and of the merchants as a class or corporate body in their relations with the fisherman. And when we speak of 'supply' we have in mind the system that has been in operation throughout the whole country for generations and is still in vogue to a great extent, though not so general as in former times.

Perhaps it is safe to say that in no other business or industry in the whole world is the interests of those engaged in it so identical as it is in the fishery industry of Newfoundland. Their interests are so identical that no branch or section of it can suffer loss without it reacting disadvantageously on the other.

The farmer who tills his fields and the consumer or merchant who purchases the product of his toil have no interest in common beyond what the trade which supply and demand or the necessities of the one or the other makes possible. But if one merchant were to supply with seeds and stock, horses and farming implements, food and clothing a whole community or district of farming people...

Getting Ready for Fishery

Active preparations are already in progress on the Southern Coast for the coming season's fishery. Two weeks more the same will apply to the northern outports, especially amongst the Twillingate and Waseleyville men who make an early trip to the Straits. Owing to the fact that the coast is clear of ice this fishery will commence much earlier than last year. There is no falling off in the number of men and schooners this season in the northern bays, chiefly owing to the encouragement given by the high prices that prevailed last year. The fishermen and planters have good reasons for believing that the price will be high again this year, and in this belief we think that they are amply justified. The Norwegian catch is very much short of that of last year, and there are only about 150,000 qts. now remaining unsold in all the stores of St. John's. This is gradually being cleared out every week, so that at the present rate of clearance there will practically be no fish left here by the end of June. The removal of the duty on our green fish going into the United States will also be an important factor in securing a high price the coming season. It is presumed that a great deal of the fish caught by the bankers out of Grand Bank, Fortune, Belleoram, St. Jacques, etc., will not be made into dry salt fish, but will be taken to Gloucester and Boston and sold green. This will prevent the Mediterranean markets from being stocked heavily with raw fish in July next, as so often happened in the past, and which contributed so largely to bring about a low opening market price for the rest of the new Newfoundland fish in August and September. It will be seen then from all these conditions that the fishery outlook for the coming summer is very bright for our people. To those who go to Labrador and have a good outfit of schooners and traps the Labrador fishery when they strike the fish early in the summer, is only an excursion. There is no money earned easier excepting perhaps, at the seal fishery. The Labrador fisherman when he meets with good luck is a free and independent man. He is not bossed around by a hard master, nor is he obliged to keep his back bent all day under the eyes of a harsh and unsympathetic boss. The elements of the sea and the wind and waves are his only task-masters. They are cruel sometimes, but they are neither tyrants nor flatterers, and manhood likes to take his chances in the struggle with them for a living. They never make a man's dignity, his pride and his manhood suffer, but rather increase these qualities in him when he comes forth from the struggle victorious. It is easy then to understand the fascination that the Labrador fishery has for our people. In these days of tempting inducements in the shape of certain and steady wages at land industries are held out to our Green Bay and Bonavista Bay fishermen, but they prefer to keep on going to the fishery. They know that there is steady work and good pay in cash the mines of Bell Island at Grand Falls and Port au Port and at Sydney, but they have another call that is more irresistible—the call of the sea, which says: Ouilman, son of four generations of fishermen, come forth once more to the struggle and wrest your living from me if you can. This is the call that will keep the fishery going for ever in Newfoundland. The number who are able to resist it are comparatively few. The song of the sea in June is like the chanting of the sirens in the Straits of Seylla calling them forth, and they are unable to say 'no'. Nothing in this world is more grateful and pleasing to the senses of the fisherman when spring begins to merge into summer than to inhale the salt laden breath of the deep blue sea and to sniff the ozone that comes borne on the ocean with every breath from heaven. The weak ones who have proved recreant to the call of the sea are taunted with the memories of this when the hot days of July settle down on the mine and the lumber woods, and they sigh for the day when they were sailing down the coast of Labrador before a southwest breeze with all sails set. No wonder that employers of labor on the land count on the fact that our fishermen in the mines or in the woods become restive when the summer sets in, as the bright warm cheering ray of the sun pours down on the landscape from a clear blue sky. Their bodies are in one place, but their souls are in another,—out on the rocking deep. The desire to be out on the ocean in a boat for a schooner is too deeply ingrained in their blood to be driven out in one generation. They are the result of heredity, and the feeling and habits that animated their fathers for four generations, when no man could go further back from the sea than his potato garden. It is no doubt well that this should be so and that men should be specially called by Nature to follow up the work that is most congenial to them. Many a time they might say with the Apostle: 'We have labored all night and caught nothing.' Even in the great disappointments in the fisherman's life there is a gain and a merit that strengthens his character, increases his hope for better things and builds up his enduring manhood. There are and always will be, thousands of men whom you can't lure away from the Labrador fishery, and this season judging from the preparation already going on, there will be more men and more schooners going to that fishery than last year. Already the cheering sound of caulking hammer is heard in the land, the odor of tar is in the spring air, and the smell of newly barked twine is permeating the atmosphere in all fishing towns from St. John's to St. Julien's. We believe that this is going to be a great year for the man who sticks to the time-honored occupation of their forefathers—the codfishery.—Herald.

Sailor Drowned

Prince Rupert, April 10.—Arthur Caravan, a Prince George sailor, fell overboard and was drowned about an hour before the steamer arrived here yesterday morning. A small boat attempted a rescue, but was too late. Caravan was a young man and came from Newfoundland.
The above has reference to the drowning of a young man belonging to Bay Roberts East. He left here for B.C. January 10th, 1912. He was a son of the late Noah and Susannah Caravan. He leaves six brothers and one sister—Charles and James, of Vancouver, Stephen, at Sydney, Thomas, Albert and Wm. Alfred in Bay Roberts, and Edith, of Vancouver.

Mr. E. Parsons, M. H. A., leaves for Toronto on Tuesday May 23rd, to attend the General Assembly which meets there on June 1st, 3rd and 4th. He goes as a representative of the Session of the Presbyterian Church at Harbor Grace. He will return about June 20th.

Messrs. Wm. Thos. and Isaac Bowring are building two boats, one for Mr. Martin Sharpe and the other for The Hudson Bay Co. They will be about 40 ft. long.

The Concert held in French's Cove School on Wednesday night proved to be a success, the children rendering the various items on the program very creditably. Over $20 was raised for school purposes.
