Cooper, the general secretary, receives his appointment from the parent organization. His excellent work has been greatly appreciated by the Canadian society.

SATURDAY'S ATTRACTIVE OPENING, NEW MODELS ARRIVING.

In addition to the arrival of models already to hand for Saturday's opening, more than 100 of the very newest styles will be received by the Dunlop Cooke Co., Ltd., on Friday, Saturday's opening will contain a selection of most attractive patterns, garments, which will be a source of delight to St. John's Easter shoppers and a decided credit to the Dunlop Cooke Co., Ltd. who, through the great courage shown by the telegraphist can be easily recognized. As it happens, the first in this line of goods, he saved the lives of hundreds of persons, and he fully deserves all the honors he has received.

IN THE NOOK OF TIME.

Curiously enough, in the early days of wireless telegraphy, a similar accident occurred, though on a much smaller scale. The East Goodwin Lightship, off the English coast, was run into, and badly damaged by the course of time, because it will be the course of time, make it impossible for an enemy's position to be kept secret. The Japs realized the danger arising from this, and they took special precautions to prevent the use of wireless telegraphy, both by the enemy and by newspaper correspondents. For all that, an English newspaper accomplished the great feat of reporting a battle by the aid of Signor Marconi's invention.

A few years ago it was stated that the Legation at Peking were in wireless communication with the warships in the Gulf of Pe-chili—a significant precaution proving how precursors in the use of wireless telegraphy were in the twentieth century. The next great war in the east will bring wireless telegraphy to the front. There were many rival inventors about and it was thought necessary to have the place selected for the experiment. It was at Corvair, Mass., guarded day and night.

SEASICKNESS QUICKLY CURED

While coming home, after successfully starting the American company, Mr. Marconi was on board a ship, in the course of a week's acquaintance, chiefly devoted to his explanation of the working of his invention, which became known as the Marconi system. The marriage never took place, and later the famous Italian married an Irish girl, Miss M. O'Brien, a daughter of Lord Inchiquin.

In connection with the loss of the Republic—Mr. Jack Binns's ship—it is interesting to recall that six years ago experiments were conducted at Corvair, Mass., with the express purpose of proving that the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy would save lives at sea. Signals were sent out from miles from the shore, and they signalled by the Marconi method that they were in distress. The signals reached other ships, and also were recorded on the shore instruments. Those present were completely convinced that wireless telegraphy was a necessity to every ship afloat.

Not long since wireless telegraphy helped to effect a clever arrest. Detectives were waiting at Queenstown for the arrival of a liner from America, on board which was a man who was "wanted." Before the steamer came into sight a wireless message was sent by the captain to keep this man under observation. Apparently, the message came just at the moment the suspect was about to be lowered by a hoisting tackle. He was prevented from jumping overboard, and when the ocean grayhound came into harbor the criminal was under arrest already.

A MESSAGE OF DEATH.

The news of a sad occurrence was sent by wireless last October in mid-Atlantic. Mr. A. Boto, an old man of eighty-six, who owned an estate worth $10,000,000, sailed from Europe for New York with the oldest of his twenty-two children. Father and son were compelled by circumstances, however, to voyage by different vessels, and for three days conversed with each other by wireless telegraphy, the father being in the Lorraine, and the son in the Campania. But on the fourth day the son received no reply to his message. Then he learned by wireless that his father was dead, and again employed wireless to make arrangements for the funeral.

This invention was put to a more pleasant use on the Campania, in 1904, when Signor Marconi assisted in the rescue of the "Cunard Daily Bulletin" by wireless telegraphy. Besides local goods, the latest stock exchanges, and was wired from shore as the vessel roared towards the other side of the Atlantic. The stock exchanges, and the market were able to know the prices of their investments in Thurgomorton Street, London, and Wall Street, New York, although they were on board a ship out of sight of land, and hundreds of miles from newspapers.

WOMEN WHO MADE MILLIONS.

Not all histories of wealthy men are worth wading over. Where the more pursuit of money is held forth as the delectable duty of life one is first mildly astonished at the point of view presented, then perhaps amused, then certainly bored. But the story of the accidents which have brought great wealth to men, the avenues through which they have hunted their quarry, is not without interest.

Such a book is Mr. Thornton Hall's "Roads to Riches," just published, and perhaps one of the best chapters is that on "Women as makers of millions." A splendid compilation was published that there were so many women who have made millions as the result of their own efforts or discoveries.

DARING MONEY-MAKER.

From the many stories which the book contains we reproduce the following: "A notable pioneer among women money-makers is Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, daughter of Senator Fair. She had, it is true, a large fortune to begin with, but about four years ago she took the management of it into her own hands.

"She sold out all her real estate holdings in San Francisco for $250,000, and went to New York to pit her brains as a money-maker against the most astute and daring financiers in the world.

"Instead of losing her fortune as was confidently anticipated, she added to it so rapidly by successful speculation that within two years she was $500,000 richer than when she started her campaign, and is increasing her millions so quickly that it is said she will one day be the richest woman in the world.

"Four years later," says Mr. Thornton Hall, "Mrs. Reader was head of the largest reporting agency in the city, and was preparing to start on her brilliant career as a financier, in which she has fought single handed some of the cleverest and richest men in Wall Street.

CHILDREN TO BE BARRED FROM HALIFAX SCHOOLS

HALIFAX, N. S., Mar. 18.—That there are nearly 1,000 pupils in the Halifax schools who are not vaccinated is the opinion of Superior McKay. All the principals have not yet made their reports to him yet, but in over twenty schools that have furnished figures the number vaccinated is 679. These are refused admittance to the schools.

SOME ROMANCES OF WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY

The magnificent pluck of Mr. Jack Binns, who sat for ten hours in the dark cabin of a doomed ship, signalling through the air for help, which saved his own life, and that of a hundred other men, makes a new era in the development of wireless telegraphy. But the first is too astonishing to be realized by the lay mind, though the great courage shown by the telegraphist can be easily recognized. As it happens, the first in this line of goods, he saved the lives of hundreds of persons, and he fully deserves all the honors he has received.

GIRL BOUND TO TREE IN NIGHT NEAR HOME

Within an Hour of Leaving House Her Grooms Bring Family to the Rescue.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., March 18.—Miss Elizabeth Brennan, a respected young woman of Cooper Hill, six miles from this city, was the victim of a mysterious attack last night, and she has since been unconscious and in a precarious condition due to nervous shock and extreme fright.

She left the house about nine o'clock and as she would be gone a few minutes. An hour later a woman neighbor entered the house, and said she had seen Miss Brennan in the yard, as if some one were in pain. An investigation revealed Miss Brennan, gagged and tied securely to a tree. She was unconscious.

A rope had been passed around her neck, another bound her arms and
