THE BURGLARS ENTRAPPED.

We went on the railroad train, Johnson and I, rushing west at the rate of thirty miles an hour. Johnson was a detective, and he and I had known each other from boyhood. We talked over our school days as we sat on the seat together; we discussed the crops; we argued the moral, social, intellectual and political questions of the day; we speculated on the weather; we brought forth every subject we could think of, until, at last, there came a lull in the conversation. Then I said, as a sudden thought struck me:

"Johnson, don't you ever have any exciting adventures in your line of business? Tell us a story of your experience, will you?"

My friend laughed, and, fixing his keen gray eyes upon my face, answered, musingly:

"Exciting adventures? Hum—yes suppose they would be called so. There are a good many occurrences that I might relate, but I don't generally care to speak to them; however, as it is you. Read; I will tell you of a curious capture that I made a few weeks ago—on one condition."

"Name it."

I knew he had some good reason for his proviso so I said:

"Certainly not. I accepted the condition."

"Last spring," he began, "I had occasion to track a noted burglar from our city to Chicago and back, but I didn't catch him after all. I almost had the clutches of the law upon him several times, but I think he must have got wind that he was pursued, for he did a number of shrewd things, and assumed a number of strange disguises, which baffled my every attempt. Still I determined he should not elude me by any mere subterfuge, and, though many times thrown off the trail, I entered B—— a few hours after the fellow himself. I don't think that he suspected he could be followed so closely, for he grew careless and soon I knew his whereabouts. I knew the man personally. We were long acquainted before I discovered his character, for he was a person of education, and in his deportment a perfect gentleman. A man whom you never would suspect to be guilty of the crime which had disgraced his career.

"Well, as I said, I found out where he was, and about nine o'clock one moonlight night, detective Davis and myself, disguised, went in search of him. It was at a house in the worst quarter of the city that we expected to find him, but he was not there. We made a search, but our eel had once more slipped through our fingers. Foiled again, we turned our steps homeward. We parted at the corner, and I was proceeding up through the business streets alone, when passing the door of a flashy saloon, I was surprised to hear the sound of a familiar voice. It was my man earnestly engaged in conversation with another fellow of the same class. It was not discreet to take him just there, so, trusting to my disguise, I entered the place. There was a crowd around the bar, eating and drinking. They stopped their loud talking and laughing for a moment to gaze on me as I entered, and immediately resumed their hilarity. By and by the two ... one in front of the doorway, went into one of the curtained recesses and ordered oysters. Their earnest conversation had the effect of rousing my curiosity, and here was the opportunity of learning what mischief was brewing. I bought some little things, a dough-nut or two, and left the saloon. Between the building and the next there was a passage way about four feet wide. Into this I went and reached the window of the stall where the burglars were. It was a warm evening in the last of May, and the window was open. I crouched down and listened and recognized the deep bass voice of my criminal in a moment.

"What I learned that night surprised and astounded me, and I don't need to tell you all, to tell you what has a bearing on the case. They were indeed plotting mischief. However, I discovered, among other things, that they were going to Nova Scotia and Canada to join a gang of thieves, that my gentleman was the leading spirit, and that a wealthy city in Massachusetts was also to be a scene of their depredations, where the whole gang would appear. I learned the whole plan, the whole method of procedure, and left the spot. This question then presented itself to me: 'Would it not be better to let this fellow alone for the present, and, by so doing, capture the whole band?' I thought it would, and notwithstanding the large amount offered for his arrest, I resolved to keep my own secret and let him depart in peace.

"The next day I discovered he took passage in a vessel bound for Halifax. I proceeded at once to S——, the city which they proposed to visit. I had many acquaintances in this place, and, without telling my object I gave a description of my man to several whom I knew I could trust. I also notified the police to look out for him about the 1st of September. I directed each of these persons to telegraph me a brief message if they should see a man who answered the description. Still I was afraid he would disguise himself and foil me again.

(To be Continued.)

Oysters for One.

A short, stubby fellow, with his hat on one side of his head, and his pants rolled up, walked into a Congress street oyster house a few evenings since, and, holding the stump of an unlighted cigar between his clenched teeth, looked around and inquired:

"Got 'ny oysters?"

"Yes, sir," said the oysterman, as he cast his eyes over a half-dozen baskets full, lying around loose.

"Well, how much be they a dozen?"

"Eighteen cents."

"Eighteen cents?"

"Yes, sir, eighteen cents."

"Sucked?"

"Opened, of course, if you want them opened."

"Well, gi'me one not sucked."

"One! What do you want of one oyster!"

"Well," said the customer confidentially, leaning over the oyster stand, and taking the cigar from between his teeth. "You see, I'm goin' to a social party out here near Albia to-night, an' some of the boys might get a foolin.' I've been round a good deal, an' I tell yer there's nothin' so coolin' an hen n like on a black eye as a good, big oyster. I guess you'd better gi'me two. How much is't?"—Baltimore Gazette.

HOW WE DO IT,

we will proceed to state

WHY WE DO IT.

In the first place we know that we have a good article, and we also know that the public will be pleased with it when they try it. Secondly—by the plan we herewith submit, the public are put in possession of the article at once; and from four to ten years saved to both consumer and proprietor. Thirdly—thousands of dollars that would be required in advertising the remedy, saved, and vast quantities of stock lying dead in the paralyzed hands of energetic Druggists in active use. Fourthly—quick returns will enable us to furnish a better article, and more of it, for the same price. Knowing that it will form one of the necessaries of life, and that it will answer the purposes for which it is intended, we are satisfied that it will advertise itself wherever and whenever used.

Grand Schedule of Golden Premiums!

It will appear evident to our patrons that general satisfaction must be given, in the distribution of our premiums, otherwise our remedy would hereafter meet with little or no favor. And, although it is said to be impossible to suit everybody, yet our plans are so thoroughly matured, that we feel justified in announcing it to be the most interesting and satisfactory enterprise ever submitted to the public.
