

The density of timber growth on the lower slopes and valleys of the Vancouver Island ranges and the western side of the Coast mountains is well depicted in the two pictures. First, a Cedar forest; second, a Douglas Fir forest. British Columbia contains about one-half total timber of Dominion.