8. STEPHENSON - Proprietor. A BLUE BOOK SERMON.

Though one would not ordinarily consult the blue books of Canada for Sunday reading yet in them may be found sermons ertinent to the age wherein truth is resented in most convincing form, the Ottawa Citizen remarks, Where, for exam; le, the Citizen asks, is the doctrine that "the way of the transgressor is hard," "the wages of sin is death," or "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap" more luminously enforced than in the reports of the de artment of justice ? Here, too, is impressively taught the value of obedience to parents by children. Take the fact that of the 1,328 con-Canada for the year 19J3 over 50 per cent. of the inmates were under 30 years of age. These figures demonstrate that the criminal class de velores in early life and preventive measures to be effective must be begua among the children. "This fact," to quote the language of the report, brings the origin of crime very close to the home life of the country."

"Although a number of these lads have come from, so-called, respectable homes," the report continues, "it would be difficult to find one who came from a home in which industry, thrift and obedience to authority have been properly inculcated, and it would be equally difficult to find one who has acquired a knowledge of any trade or calling sufficient to enable him to earn an honest livelihood. The rarentage of crime has been ascribed to intemperance, illiteracy, heredity, companionship and many other causes, but though each of these may claim relationship, near or remote, the experience taught by actual contact with delinquents leads to the belief that idleness and improvident habits have a strong claim to the position of direct parentage. "The inculcation of the gospel of labor' as expressed in the Pauline injunction 'if any would not work." neither shall he eat' is alike the essential foundation of good citizenship and of individual reform. Every delinquent should be given a sound practical illustration of its merits. In our institutions we teach practical trades and endeavor, so far as is feasible under the congregate system, to prevent contact between young convicts and old criminals; but the limitation of our work to prison requirements makes it difficult to enforce industry as it is understood and practised in outside industrial establishments. If our penal institutions rigidly enforce habits of industry, economy and obedience to authority and the release of the delinquent is followed by humane encouragement and assistance the State will merely have performed its duty and it will reap the advantages that accrue."

The lesson is plain: The boy who is disobedient to parents, on the street when he should be in the school, loafing when he should be learning a trade-that boy is on the way to the penitentiary and will surely come to grief if not to prison, and his parents will know the bitterness of having a son who did wickedly and they restrained him not.

The change in postal arrangements in New York since "the good old times" may be seen by the following advertisement, copied by the Troy Times from Bradford's New York Gazette of from Bradictus New 101s Gasette C. Dec. 6, 1747:

"Cornelius Van Denburgh as Albany Post designs to set out for the first time this winter on Thursday next. All time this winter on Thursday next. All time this winder of the second desired to be letters to go by him are desired to be sent to the postoffice or to his house near the Spring Garden."

During Hudson river navigation the Albany mail was transmitted by sloops, but in the winter a messenger, as above mentioned, was required, and it is probable that he traveled on foot. The winter average of the eastern and southern mails is given in the same paper and same date as follows:

"On Tuesday the Tenth Instant at 9 o'clock in the Forenoon the Boston and Philadelphia Posts set out from New York to perform their stages once a Fort'nite during the Winter months and are to set out at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. An Uabroken Spell. When we have a "spell o' weather," and wet weather at that, we have only to recall the climatic conditions of Dartmoor, in England, in order to be thankful for a little.

The moor has, says a writer in Cornhill, an eternal procession of clouds, infinitely varied in form, lighted with a white radiance or lowering in gloom, rent, tattered or filmy, gathering, menacing, creeping round to swath you in a mist of rain or dropping one of those silvery showers lighted with sunshine from behind.

Of heavier rain there is no lack, and all one can say of the perennially heau-tiful moor is summed up in the verse invented by its enemies:

Watting Upon His Bride.

Two hundred years ago it was a custom very general in England for the bridegroom to wait upon his bride on their wedding day. The following extract from John Shebbeare's "Matrimouy," a book published in the middle of the eighteenth century, testifies to this and refers to the popular supersition about it: "The dinner being served, Sir Oliver was the gayest man in the company. The bridegroom and bride sitting by the side of each other, the old gentleman observed: "Ods-heart, ods-heart! What, dine with the bride the first day! A fine bridegroom; a fine bridegroom! It was the fashion when I was married to stand behind the bride's chair with a napkin and serve her. Serve her today; she'll serve you always after."

THE GREAT POPULAR RAILROAD, It has been loosely stated that corporations have no souls—a premise based no doubt upon the tendency of some corporations to eliminate the personal element so far as possible from their management. Nevertheless, the railway corporation has just as pronounced an individuality as the Montreal, Feb. 25.—Mrs. McGee, an old lady about 85 years of age. who lived alone in a house at Eaton Corners, about ten miles from Sherbrooke, perished in the flames which destroyed her home at an early hour yesterday as pronounced an individuality as the average business man.

There are railway corporations which incur the dislike of the general public apparently for psychological reasons. Their rolling stock may be in excellent condition and their time schedules well carried out, and yet owing to a certain atmosphere associated with the management, the road will be distinctly unpopular.

The New York Central Railroad is one of the happy exceptions. With a magnificent roadbed and a thoroughly modern train service, they would seem to have kept faith with their patrons in every way; but there is a disposition on the part of the management to go a little further than the contract actually calls for, by placing special comferts and countesies at the disposal of their patrons, which makes this road a favorite with all who can arrange to utilize its service,—From the Monthly Cyclopaedia of Practical Medicine.
