

NARKA,

THE NIHILIST.

Marguerite wrote occasionally, brightly and affectionately. But toward the close of the winter Sibyl began to speak of Marguerite with anxiety. The child's health was very delicate; there was no organic ailment but she was dropping like a flower; they had had several excellent offers of marriage for her, but she had refused them all unhesitatingly, giving no reason except that she was not in a hurry to marry.

Narka read all this with growing apprehension. Could it be that Marguerite's feeling for Basil had been deep enough to make her shrink from the idea of ever marrying any one else? Narka had never contemplated such trouble as this. She had hoped, and had come honestly to believe, that it had been a mere passing flame such as the first accomplished man meets kindly early in the heart of every young girl. It would be dead by the time Narka's spirit of bright light Marguerite was entering on life with a husband.

One day a letter came announcing that the doctors had ordered her to go south and travel for a couple of months.

The remedy seemed most opportune. Sibyl said, "Mr. Charles has been lingering on in Florence, intending to go to Rome for Lent. It will be delightful for us to join him there, and I am very much in need of a change myself. Marguerite had at first seemed charmed at the idea of going to Rome, but all of a sudden, when the programme was settled, she changed her mind, and was as nervous and depressed over it as if she had been ordered to go to the moon. The doctors say this unresolvable state of affairs is only an additional proof that she wants change, and they assure us that the journey will be her right. We are now in the hands of packing, and I shall probably not write again until we are starting."

Narka could not pretend to herself that this letter was not a shock. She was not alone; she did not for a moment doubt the strength of Basil's conviction that it was hardly in woman's nature that she should not feel uncomfortable at the prospect of his being thrown for two months into daily hourly companionship with a charming girl who was deeply in love with him, and whom he was already very fond of. Oh, Narka was not indignant; but her heart rose in passionate rebellion against the cruel fate which put Narka and Marguerite face to face between her and Basil, and forced him into the society of Marguerite. And it was Sibyl's duty for the first time in her life Narka felt angry with Sibyl. It was very well to talk about the lucky chance that had brought this meeting about; it was more likely the result of Sibyl's clever maneuvering. She had long ago set her heart on this marriage; fate, which was fighting against Narka with such overpowering odds, was playing Sibyl's hands, and Sibyl's power, and had always made everything bend to their will. They were now leaving Marguerite's destiny to it. Was it quite impossible that they should eventually bond Sibyl?

Narka was as restless in the narrow cottage rooms as a cat in a cage. It was horrible to have to carry this guest who was in her flesh and go about with a smiling countenance, discussing with Madame Larik the best way of preparing the codfish for the dinner. The society of the woman was intolerable. Why should heaven and earth be set against her, as they had been for her cousin up?

"Narka, you are stinging like a soul in purgatory crying out for prayers," said her mother, as poor Narka gave her for the first time a strain of passionate music, and in the next breath she was saying, "Mother, I am a soul in purgatory," she answered with a dry laugh. "It is my firm belief that this life is purgatory, and that in the next there will be only heaven and hell."

"Dear! dear! what a wonderful notion you have about this! You had a full of poetry, child, but not that there is any sense in what you say. I do believe this life is purgatory for many of us, and mostly to those who don't want any purgatory, one would think. Alas! alas!"

Narka knew that the concluding sign was directed to Father Christopher. Each knew that he was seldom out of the other's mind, but as by tacit consent they never spoke of him.

A week went by. There was a fresh fall of snow in the night. The next morning the wind rose, and with it from the north. A carrier coming on horseback from X said the roads were impassable from the snow, and that the next week traffic was suspended. If Prince Zerkoff had been at work, but there was no one there now to press the passport into the snow. Even the Stewards were away at X, which was pleasant in this weather than snowed-up Yakov.

At the end of three weeks the well-known face of the postman appeared at the cottage gate. He brought two letters from Sibyl. One bore the Paris postmark, the other that of Palermo. Narka went up to her room to read them. She opened the one from Paris first.

"If I have a most extraordinary piece of news to tell you, my Narka, Sibyl began, 'I ought to have written to you sooner, but I was so bewildered at the first moment that I had not the courage to finish a letter. I had just begun to say:

"I told you that Marguerite showed the strongest reluctance to go to Italy when everything was settled. It put us all at sea. She was very nervous and quite miserable, but gave no explanation of her sudden change. At last, one morning before I was up, she came into my room, and sat on the edge of my bed, and said: 'I have something to say that will be a surprise, and I fear a disappointment to you. I can't go with you to Italy. I have made up my mind to be a Sister of Charity.' 'I was so taken aback that I could not speak for a moment, but just stared at her as if she had gone mad. 'I have been thinking about it for a long time,' she went on, 'and I am now quite sure it is my vocation. The idea of going to Rome and seeing the Pope, the Pope's face, the Pope's eyes, and I must not yield to it; so instead of going off with you and Gaston, I am going to the Rue du Bac to take my novitiate.' I really did think that the child had gone out of her mind. 'Why? I said, you will be dead in a month, the hardships of the life will kill you. She laughed, and said, 'Oh, no! I promise you not to be dead before two months!
