THE FARM

THE CARE OF FARM HORSES.

As the season is nearing when horses will be more stabled than they will be worked, it is well that their diet receive some study and investigation. For such the bran-mash has proved to be an invaluable adjunct to the ordinary diet. As a laxative food it ranks as one of the most useful, and it is a food that is as a rule always available and readily obtainable.

Horsesmen generally give a bran-mash once a week (often if required) when no other laxative food is provided in the diet. Grain, hay and chaff, which is the ordinary diet of horses that are stabled, are apt to exert a binding effect, as this food is of a dry nature, and grain, when liberally fed, has a tendency to heat the system. These undesirable effects must be counteracted by providing laxative food, and the bran-mash has been found to be the most valuable for this purpose.

The beneficial part of the bran-mash is that it relaxes the bowels nicely and does not act on them in a violent manner, nor does it purge. Besides it is cooling, and has a wholesome effect upon the animal. When horses have undergone an unusually severe exertion, and are very tired and exhausted, a warm bran-mash proves a soothing, palatable and easily digested food. For a sick horse, these mashies are excellent, as they suit the animal's requirements and tempt the appetite.

As a general thing, horses are fond of these bran-mashes; yet once in a while an animal will be found that shows no liking for them. Such cases, however, are rare. But when that is the fact, the horse can be induced to eat them by adding a handful or two of oats.

The proper way to prepare the mash is to use sufficient boiling water to wet all the bran thoroughly. This should be done in a bucket, which should then be covered over and the mash allowed to steam for about a half-hour. This steaming will partially cook the bran, thus making it all the more effective and soothing. It is well to add a pinch of salt. The usual quantity of bran used is from a half to three-quarters of a peck.
