Snobs and Climbers Still.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

Does it seem possible that, into anything so big, so fine, so vital as Red Cross work, there could possibly come anything so petty, so ugly, so trivial as small personal feelings, narrow prejudices, social snobbery? And yet, not long ago a woman told me that several of the women in her neighborhood who formerly been regular attendants at the Red Cross workrooms, had been going there because they did like the woman who had been put in charge.

I tried to find out if the new head had been disagreeable or domineering in her attitude, but that did not seem to be the case. They simply did not like her personally, as well as the woman who had preceded her, they were registering their resentment at the change by staying away from the workroom!

This is Not The Motive of Most Women.

And from a friend who has moved to a city which, though small, has a reputation of being one of the most snobbish and cliquey in the country, I received this description of the attitude of several women she met there:

"One of the snobbiest things I ever met was a criticism of the numbers of women who have tried to get to 'break into' the Red Cross."

Think of that!

How Petty Both Classes Are!

How unbelievably petty, from both sides of view--that of the society women who want to keep the great things of working through the Red Cross for our soldiers, for her and for small, select gatherings of sisters; and that of the social snobs who calculatingly look upon work merely as a ladder by which they can climb into an acquaintance with someone to whom she looks upon as her social superior!

They Get No Spiritual Sense Of The War.

How can they live in such tremendously big times, and be so utterly petty as that?

Still another friend told me of a woman of high social standing who gives teas and bazaars for war charities. Women of lesser social standing are invited, and flock to them with joy, though the prices are enormous. The privilege of meeting the hostess and saying they have been in her home is what they pay for, not the tea or fancy articles. These are just necessary camouflage.

"Does she cut them afterwards?" someone asked.

"Certainly not!" said her friend.

"She is a gentlewoman. But, of course, she never has any personal acquaintance with them."

That incident is not quite so ugly. In fact, the hostess showed a commendable willingness to use her particular talent for the good of the cause by capitalizing her social standing.

One could wish she did not feel obliged to remain so strictly aloof, afterwards, but perhaps that is asking too much.

Our Daily Story.

DISSTON SNOOK'S SYSTEM.

Disston Snook was a methodical young man. He had a system for everything. So, when he made up his mind to woo the fair Sapphia Blunt, he reasoned thuswise:

"I must be absolutely sure of success before I propose. The girls nowadays are so independent that they won't take a man unless he is indispensable to them. Therefore, I must make myself indispensable."

For four months he took a night school course in household engineering. Then he began calling on Sapphia Blunt.

The first evening he discovered that the parlor clock wasn't working, and, whipping out his little box of pocket tools, he repaired it.

Gradually Sapphia and her mother came to depend on him. They got in the way, quite as a matter of course, of asking him to attend to broken window cords, spigot washers, etc.

"I'm becoming indispensable," Disston Snook thought to himself, after three months had gone by. Then one evening when he called, Sapphia's mother hung up his hat for him and said confidentially, "Mr. Snook, you're a real treasure around a house, so handy and all, and as I so often say to Sapphia, I don't know what we'd ever do without you, and in fact I don't see any reason why we should."

Mr. Snook--Disston, there's something on my mind that I want to say to you."

Disston Snook waited, with eyes downcast modestly, wondering whether Niagara Falls or Atlantic City would make the better honeymoon.

"Mr. Snook--Disston, my daughter Sapphia ran off this afternoon and married that shiftless Jack First. But the house wouldn't seem the same without you. Mr. Snook--there's a dozen things that need fixing right now. So if you like, you can board here with me and I'll only charge you eleven dollars a week."

Disston Snook slammed the front door so hard after him that it broke all the windows in the front of the house.

LOOK PLEASANT.

WALT MASCH

The news that comes from over the seas off makes my face with fear grow pale, and I can feel my toes freeze, while I peruse the dispatches. How Teuts have wedge right through the allies, deep and wide, and I exclaim, "It's time to hedge--the tail is going with the hide. Some moons ago I used to scoff at those who said the Teuts would win; but at this hour all bets are off, and here's where hedging must begin."

My wife remarks "Don't talk that way when you are mingling with the bunch; you might dishearten some poor Jay, and make him think we've lost our punch. You know as well as I do, James, your lamentations are a fake; we'll lose, perchance, a brace of games--the series we are bound to take. What if our armies sometimes slide, and lose a hill, a fort, or town? You know we'll get the Teuton's hide, and nail it deftly to the barn." Thus shamed by my Amanda Jane, I shoo my doated fears away, and go kerwhopping down the lane, to make the neighbours feel more gay.

Men stand around and sweat and quake when news of evil luck arrives, but there is nothing that can shake the Spartan courage of their wives. Oh, woman, in your hour of ease, you play bridge whist for fun or kale, but when the war flags hit the breeze, you shame the rabbit hearted male.

peaceful slumber. Avoid reading exciting stories or having disturbing conversations before bedtime. Half an hour before retiring sit quietly in an easy chair with the feet elevated.

A daily walk in the open air is a tonic of inestimable value. Walking diverts the mind, brings unused muscles into play, stirs a lagging circulation, and when accompanied by deep breathing, gives new vitality to the blood through the increasing oxygen supply which comes as a natural sequence to deep breathing.

There is only one way in which we may preserve our good looks and that is by daily care. Wrinkles when they begin to form and deepen, when the half falls out, becomes lusterless or fades, the nerves are usually at fault and we should take all measures possible to control and strengthen them.

Household Notes.

Fat should always be very hot before food to be fried is dropped into it.

If desired, any meat casserole can be thickened by macaroni, rice or barley.

The work of whipping cream is lessened by half if the cream is first chilled.

It is hardly possible to have too much spinach on the table in spring weather.

To smooth an iron plunge it while very hot into cold water with a little soap in it.

If an iron is allowed to get red hot, it will never retain the heat so well again.

A good casserole is made by combining carrots, turnips, onions, beef and barley.

A novel idea is to flavor string beans with mint and serve them with roast lamb.

After a whiskbroom has become ragged trim off evenly and use as a sink brush.

A table wagon with a shallow drawer in it is much more useful than one without.

Mild mustard is a good "green" which goes to waste because nobody knows about it.

Baking powder biscuits made with potato require more powder to make them light.

It is the greatest economy to purchase the best spices; poor ones are usually adulterated.

It's always more economical to measure materials in cooking than it is to guess at them.

Baked bananas are very wholesome for people who could not possibly eat them uncooked.
