F. T. Perley, a member of one of Brantford's oldest families, died the other day after an illness of about a fortnight of typhoid fever, aged 26 years.

Detective Griffin, of the Ontario Agency, arrested Jennie C. Beckett in Brantford on Wednesday on the charge of forgery. The girl is between 20 and 21 years old, and she takes her position very coolly. According to her story she comes from near Simoce, and while working in the Williams Hotel at Waterford she fell a victim to the wiles of a young man of that town. She subsequently went to Fort Erie, staying with C. Patterson, and accompanied by his son came to Brantford about two weeks ago. She visited a friend's house on Albion street and shortly after was confined. The offense for which she has been arrested is that of an alleged lorgery for $10 on Mr. Patterson. She was taken to Fort Erie this afternoon. The case is a very similar one to that of the Peckham girl, and both of them come from the same district.

of assaulting Donald Campbell, of Southwold.

Levi Fowler was born on Long Point in 1805. While a child, his parents removed to Southwold, and settled where Fingal now stands. Mr. Fowler, when he grew to man's estate, became possessed of the farm on which Fingal is located, and with the growth of the village made considerable money in selling real estate. About 1840 he and Mr. Amass Wood entered into partnership as general merchants, and so continued for many years. Latterly Mr. Fowler retired from all active business, although until a couple of years ago he continued to act as township treasurer, a position he filled for a long term of years. He died on Tuesday, aged 86 years.

Surmise.

Contrast with this the divine dogmatism of the fourteenth chapter of John. There is no reaching after truth here, no discussion of probabilities, no hypothesis or opinions. Immorality is not a "question" to be argued, nor companionship with God in the future a "great hope," nor heaven a "glorious venture." I have often written in these columns in condemnation of dogmatism, and I shall again. But there is a divine dogmatism, which rests not on self-conceit of knowledge, but on divine revelation, either through the mouth of prophet or through through the mouth of prophet or through the invisible witness of the spirit—the dog-matism that condemns not doubt, but yet declares, with calm and uncontroversial as urance, resting on God's Word, "We know"—Paul's favorite and oftrepeated phrase. Christ gives his disciples not onlying, but knowledge; not repeated phrase. Christ gives his disciples, not opinion, but knowledge; not hypotheses, but revelation; not glorious ventures, but glorious assurance. This is the first great and radical difference between Philosophy and Christianity: Philosophy thinks, Christianity knows. Socrates to his disciples says: "Whether I have succeeded or not, I shall truly know in a little while, if God will, when I myself arrive in the other world." Christ to his disciples says: "Ye have faith in God; have also faith in me. "I go to prepare a place for you." Philosophy trands or the ciples says: "Ye have faith in God; have also faith in me. " I go to prepare a place for you." Philosophy stands on the shore, peers out into the darkness and thinks there is a continent. Christianity brings back the message that there is one—a land not unknown, though too glorious for description.

He who does this comes very near substituting Secrates for Christ, philosophy for Christianity, opinions for life. Whether a creed serves a useful or an injurious purpose depends upon whether the creed is a company.

pends upon whether the creed is sub-servient to the spirit or the spirit is sub-servient to the creed—whether it is a tool servient to the creed—whether it is a tool which the spirit uses or a chain by which it is bound.

III. Philosophy is generally pessimistic; Christianity is always full of hope. Philosophy takes man as he is; and in man as he is there is not much hope. Christianity gives to man One, who is not man; and in that One there is infinite hope. Philosophy can at best explain the phenomena of life; Christianity imparts new power to it. Life blossoms when God touches it, as the desert plain when Heaven's waters descend upon it. Philosophy is an explanation; Christianity is also a gift.

The difference between the two is strikingly illustrated by the contrast between

"And where shall we find a good charmer of our fears, Socrates, when you are gone?"

"Greece," he replied, "is a large place, Cebes, and has many good men, and there are barbarous races not a few, seek for him among them all, far and wide, sparing neither pains nor money; for there is no better way of using your money. And you must not forget to seek for him among yourselves also; for he is nowhere more likely to be found."
