Canada's Jubilee

The fiftieth anniversary of the confederation of the several provinces into one Dominion was fittingly observed in the Watford churches on Sunday, with a seriousness and solemnity becoming a celebration of the kind during the progress of the war. The services were special in their character in regard to prayers, hymns and scripture reading and the ministers struck a high patriotic note in their sermons. In most cases the discourses presented to the congregations a brief synopsis of the confederation movement which resulted in a united and prosperous Canada, and ideals set for the future guidance of the people. In the Sunday schools a program was followed tending to enrich the patriotism of the young. Simple decorations of flags and flowers were used in all places of worship. The heavy rain storm in the morning prevented many from turning out, but the evening congregations were large.

Monday was ideal weather for a holiday. Fine, moderately cool and bracing with a freshness in the air only enjoyed after a heavy rain. The day was observed just as any ordinary public holiday. Picnics and auto parties, fishing and gardening, tidying up the premises and other usual holiday stunts occupied the time of most of the town people. There was a dearth of flags on the business section, but several dwelling houses were profusely decorated with flags and bunting.

Canadians certainly do not make a display of their patriotism and an onlooker would never learn from the enthusiasm we display or the noise we make that we are citizens of the very best country on earth.
