

All those persons to whom this number may be forwarded are requested to become subscribers to the work themselves, and to use their influence in inducing others in their respective neighborhoods to give it their support. But should any not be inclined to encourage it, they are requested to return it to the publisher, otherwise they will be considered as subscribers. No subscription will be received in future for less than a year, and no magazine will be discontinued without written notice to the Editor, nor then, except all arrearages are paid.

Should any person who may hereafter subscribe, wish to commence from the beginning of this volume, they can be accommodated with the back numbers

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We do assure our friends, who write for this publication, that we feel highly pleased on receiving well written articles on various subjects, to be inserted in the work. And in our opinion the most of the communications with which we have been favored, will in some considerable degree bear this character. We refrain from making any remarks on those which we have received for this number, leaving our readers the privilege of making such observations as they may think proper as respects their merits or demerits.

Knox, having come too late for this number, will appear in our next.

NEW PUBLICATION.

We have been favored with a perusal of the manuscript of a work, entitled—"the origin of the North American Indians," by Mr. McIntosh author of the origin of the primitive inhabitants of Great Britain and Ireland. To the origin of the Indians, there is prefixed a brief sketch of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, translated from the Spanish of Don Cortez by the author. As we have neither time nor space in this number for remarks, and must defer them till a future period. It is not, however, but justice to state that we believe it to be one with which the public will be pleased. It affords a great deal of information on a subject which has been involved in obscurity; and as the author has founded his assertions on the researches of the most eminent antiquaries that have discussed the subject, the work will, no doubt, prove satisfactory. We wish the young author, therefore every possible success in the sale of his two new publications.
