Anniversary

Today's services call attention to phase of the war which is less perhaps on the lips than in the hearts of men. The good old British breed is not so fond of open religious professions as are some other races, but they are not less essentially religious. After all, the religion they officially follow lays stress on the fact that it is not what a man professes, but what he does that counts in the long run. By their fruits ye shall know them. We may pass over the squabbles that are continually taking place over professions and assertions. Not every one

Spend What You Can Spare

A touching story is culled from The Globe. It is that of a young Englishday in war securities. Should be con- tredit in the memorandum handed to tinue in well doing he will have loan- the pressed the government at the end of the year £60, or quite 4 per cent. of his annual income.

We are not informed as to whether the young man is married or not, but in any event he seems to have personally engrossed all the self-denial which his savings represent. We glimpse something of his struggle and triumph in his letter to The Spectator. He says:

Another great point about it is that one realizes how small sums even mount up, and also, it is splendid to be reminded from day to day in this way of one's duty to save, and it is astonishing how a "taxi" less here and a "cigar" less there provides, without any hardship, the wherewithal.

From the proposition that an unmarried man should save at least $300 cut of an income of $7500 per year, we do not dissent. We may, however, examine with more care the moral with which The Globe adorns the tale when

There are lots of people in Canada who would profit by practising war time thrift and buying war loan vouchers.

A good many of us have been prac ising war time thrift without accumulating war loan vouchers or other gilt-edge securities. Even doing without a taxi now and then, has failed to place many wage-earners in the investing class. Many have had their incomes reduced or cut off altogether. and there has been much enforced economy. The result of that economy has been felt by manufacturers, merchants and business men generally, who in many cases have been com pelled to lay off employes and curtain expenses. It is human nature to save at the end of the barrel, but the saving is sometimes only a little less shortsighted than extravagance. Generally speaking, times are good when people buy freely, and therefore we rejoice when factories report big orders and merchants say that trade is brisk. Is there some peculiar situation, due to Canada's participation in the war, which would lead us to advise our readers to walk by the shops without looking in the windows? Should people who are able and willclothes and automobiles, do without them: should people with money to spend be encouraged to spend it? tion as the United States, Nationally, we are in the war with Britain, while the United States stands aloof. But our economic situation is analogous to theirs. Like them, we have plenty of the jail, 163 of whom were men and food to export, with the prospect of been greatly increased in others. The manufacture of war munitions, equipment and supplies has been feverishly stimulated in both countries. If the United States benefits by the war so will Canada. There cannot be good times in the United States and hard times in Canada simultaneously. True, many of our boys have gone to the front, but their going has steadied rather than demoralized the industrial situation. We are 'somewhat increasing our national debt on that calleth Lord, Lord, we are assured, account of the war, but not enough to shall enter into the kingdom, but he affect the country one way or other. that doeth the will of the Father.
