

Christian world. Even some of its severer qualities have won the confidence and love of Orientals. Indians revered the inflexible manliness of Lord John Lawrence. But the besetting sin of Anglo-Saxonism in the East is arrogance that disdains what it conquers, and wounds when it essays to help. The unconscious reflection of that race-spirit in some religious efforts of the West in the East has hardened hearts that might be won and widened chasms that might be bridged by substituting for the authority of Churchmanship and the irritating assumption of racial superiority, the perfect chivalry and cosmopolitanism of Him who was meek and lowly in heart. The democracy of nations is a truth that the West is slow of heart to believe. In the soul of the West lives the dream of a divine vocation of empire. It is a Roman inheritance. Through the inspiration of that dream great results of good and evil have followed. The development of the resources of the world has been hastened. The spread of knowledge has been advanced. The conception of international relationships
