PURITY FLOUR

Jeanne of the Marshes
BY E. P. OPPENHEIM

"So!" she said, "I have been in rooms at a farmhouse there, Caynard's farm. I went away because I did not like the life here, and because my step-mother," she continued, turning toward the Count, "seemed determined that I should marry you. I thought that I would go away into the country, somewhere where I could think quietly, and to Salhouse because it was the only place I knew."

"You are the maddest child!" the Princess exclaimed.

Jeanne smiled, a little wearily.

"If I had been mad," she said, "I have come to my senses again."

The Count leaned towards her eagerly. "I trust," he said, "that that means that you are ready now to obey your step-mother, and to make me very, very happy."

Jeanne looked at him deliberately.

"It depends," she said, "upon circumstances."

"Tell me what they are quickly," the Count declared. "I am impatient. I cannot bear that you keep me waiting. Let me know of my happiness."

The Princess was suddenly uneasy. There was one weak point in her schemes, a weakness of her own creating. Ever since she had told Jeanne the truth about her lack of fortune, she had felt that it was a mistake. "Suppose she should be so good as to give the thing away! The Princess felt her heart beat fast at the mere supposition. There was something about Jeanne's delicate oval face, her straight nose and level eyebrows, which somehow suggested that gift which to the Princess was so incomprehensible in her secret. "Suppose Jeanne were to tell the Count the truth!"

"What of it, then," Jeanne said. "I must ask you whether my step-mother has told the truth about myself and my fortune."

The Princess knew then that the game was up. She sank back upon the sofa, and at that moment she would have declared that there was nothing in the world more terrible than an ungrateful and inconsiderate child.

"The truth?" the Count remarked, a little puzzled. "I know only what the world knows, that you are a daughter of Carl le Mesurier, and that he left you the residue of one of the greatest fortunes in Europe."

"Jeanne drew a letter from her pocket. "The Princess," she remarked, "must have forgotten to tell you. This great fortune that all the world has spoken of, and that seems to have made me so famous, has been all the time something of a myth. It has existed only in the imagination of my kind friends. A few days ago my step-mother here told me this. I wrote at once to Monsieur Laplance, my trustee. She would not let me send the letter. When I was at Salhouse, however, I wrote again, and this time I had a reply. It is here. There is a statement," she continued, "which covers many pages, and which shows exactly how my father's fortune was exaggerated, how securities have dwindled, and how my step-mother's insisting upon a very large allowance during my school-days, has eaten up so much of the residue. There is left to me, it appears, a sum of fourteen thousand pounds. That is a very small fortune, is it not?" she asked calmly.

The Count was gazing at her as one might gaze upon a tragedy.

"It is not a fortune!" he exclaimed, "it is not even a dot! It is nothing at all, a year's income, a trifle."

"Nevertheless," Jeanne said calmly, "it is all that I possess. You see," she continued, "I have come back to my step-mother to tell her that if I am bound by law to do as she wishes until I am of age, I will be dutiful and marry the man whom she chooses for me, but I wish to tell you two things quite frankly. The first you have just heard. The second is that I do not care for you in the least, that in fact I rather dislike you."

The Princess buried her head in her hands. She was not anxious to look at any one just then, or to be looked at. The count rose to his feet. There were drops of perspiration upon his forehead. He was distracted.

"Is this true, madam?" he asked of the Princess.

"It is true," she admitted.

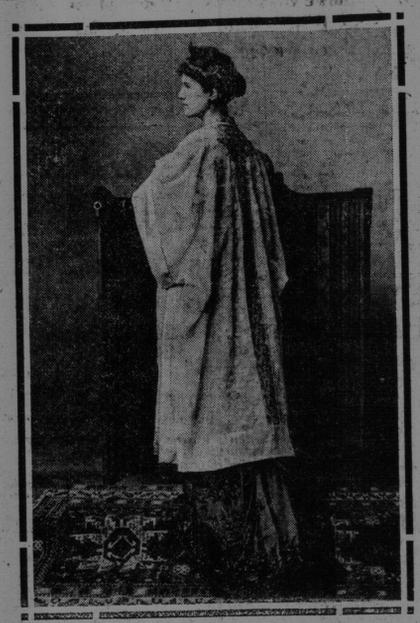

He hunched towards her.

"What about my three thousand pounds?" he whispered. "Who will pay me back that? It is cheating. That money has been gotten by what you call false pretences. There is punishment for that, eh?"

The Princess dabbed her eyes with a little morsel of lace handkerchief.

"One must live," she murmured. "It was not I who talked about Jeanne's fortune. It was all the world who said how rich she was. Why should I contradict them? I wanted a place once more in the only society in Europe which counts English society. There was only one way and I took it. So long as people believed Jeanne to be the heiress of a great for-

TRANSPARENT EVENING WRAP THIS WINTER

Inconspicuous as it may seem, all sorts of gaudy stuffs are now being used for carriage wraps. Cliftons and lace, unlined except with the thinnest silk, are quite the proper thing for midwinter, it seems—at least, many of the new wraps for opera wear have been selected with a view to all winter service. This lovely wrap of gray chiffon is embroidered in self-color and is draped over lime green silk, a border of gray satin edging the wrap all around. The heavier embroidery forming yoke and panel is of gray net embroidered in silver and green threads.

BORDEN ADDRESSES TORONTO MEETING

Ignores Party Revolt—Emerson Against the Naval Policy

Toronto, Nov. 1.—Before a crowded audience in the Conservative Club rooms, tonight R. L. Borden, leader of the opposition in parliament, addressed the Toronto South Toronto Cooperative club.

Mr. Borden spoke with great deliberation and evidently weighed his words carefully. He unhesitatingly reaffirmed his adherence to the national defence policy, as outlined in the program of common resolution, passed last March with one single modification, providing that in a sudden emergency the government be prepared to make a grant of money to assist the imperial defence.

"So long as we fly the empire's flag in Canada," said the Conservative leader, "we cannot hold aloof from the empire in time of danger." Loud cheers greeted this statement.

Mr. Borden scouted the idea of Canada relying on the navy of the United States in time of danger, and characterized as absurd the plea that we are incapable of building a navy in this country on account of the high cost of iron and other materials.

The board decided to recommend that the application of George McKean be made to the Dominion government for a grant of money to assist the imperial defence.

"Do you intend to express these views in the house?"

"I think I will," and he added he believed that a non-party division was a possibility.

He does not believe Premier Murray of Nova Scotia was master of the situation, Borden as minister of militia.

D. McNICOLL OF C.P.R. COMING TO ST. JOHN

Will Take Up West Side Transfer Agreement—The Berths Alotted

At a private meeting of the harbor board yesterday afternoon it was announced that the C. P. R. would not agree to all the clauses in the agreement recently drawn concerning the transfer of the west side lands. Just what the objections are is not definitely known, but a letter was received from D. McNicoll stating he would be in St. John next week and would be pleased to discuss the agreement with the harbor board. The common clerk was instructed to write to Mr. McNicoll the object of a committee would await his arrival for a conference.

The application of the superintendent of dredges for a lease of the slip in West St. John, now used by the work being done by the government at No. 6 berth, was referred, and it was recommended that a lease be given for a year without charge, much less being subject to termination at a month's notice and conditional upon the city having free access to the property and blocks when not in use.

A communication from Frank Fairweather with reference to insurance at Sand Point was referred to, as was also the report of the city engineer on the work being done by the government at No. 6 berth. The city engineer was instructed to have soundings taken at the harbor master with his report, and the harbor master was authorized to have additional soundings taken if he thought it advisable.

The allotment of berths at Sand Point was next taken up. Warehouses 1, 2 and 3 were allotted to the C. P. R. The cost of their expense, and also to rearrange the piling. The same agreement in force by Hall's Cataraugus. Of Toronto, O. We the undersigned have known J. J. O'Connell for many years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially solvent.

THE MAGISTRATE AND THE DRISCOLL CASE

John A. Barry left last evening for Fredericton to attend the sitting of the supreme court. Mr. Barry will make application for a mandamus or for a rule nisi to compel the police magistrate to send up the proceedings in the Driscoll case. It will be remembered that in the latter part of June Driscoll, who conducts a grocery and beer store combined, on Mill street, was convicted of keeping open his licensed premises after 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon and was fined $30. Mr. Barry appealed the case and says that the magistrate refused to send up the proceedings.

MANN PLEASD WITH MCBRIDE BARGAIN

Toronto, Nov. 1.—D. D. Mann, vice-president of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, returned Sunday from a trip to the Pacific coast. He said British Columbia was badly in need of better transportation facilities, and that Premier McBride had adopted the best means of securing them.

British Columbia has only one for us what Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, and the federal government have done. Our railway system is guaranteed also exempt from taxation for ten years. There is nothing extraordinary in that, and I think the question should have been kept out of politics altogether."

"And," he continued, "now that we have secured a line to the Pacific seaboard, we will never rest until the line between Port Arthur and Sellwood has been made possible. At present matters are at a deadlock, as it is difficult to turn the land grant into money. The west will never enjoy the full benefit of our line until that link is constructed, making the Canadian Northern a transcontinental route."

RODNEY WHARF IS DANGEROUS, THIS VIEW OF THE JURY

"We, the jury empaneled to enquire into the death of Patrick McGoldrick of the city of St. John, find that he died in the public hospital on the 24th day of October from injuries received by falling off a Rodney wharf at the street railway terminus as he was about to take a car for his home on Douglas avenue. We strongly recommend that the responsible parties build a fence across the jog inside the bumper and also a fence along the whole south side of the street railway trestle work. We further recommend that a responsible party be appointed caretaker for the public safety on the wharf. We therefore believe that the deceased lost his life on account of insufficient light and want of proper protection against falling over the wharf."

The foregoing verdict was reached last night by the coroner's jury in the inquest into the death of Patrick McGoldrick. The jury, which was out a little more than an hour considering their verdict, was composed of Bartholomew Holt, foreman; John Fitzgerald, A. W. Emery, Sydney Gibbs, James Wilson, Joseph Doody and William Hatfield.

The following letter, written on July 12 last by Mrs. R. E. Purdy, of Condie, Sack, gives an idea of the variety of the uses of D. D. D. in the household:

"Last winter I sent for one of your free samples of D. D. D. Prescription. I tried it on my baby's head, on my eyes and on a mild type of eczema, and found it worked well, curing each trouble quickly and easily. This summer we have used it on bad mosquito bites, and it helps them in two or three applications."

THE CONSPIRACY CHARGE AGAINST THE COAL MEN

Halifax, Nov. 1.—Another stage in the coal operators' conspiracy case was entered today this afternoon. An hour was taken up with an application for the production of a deposition of Mr. McLaughlin, the local treasurer of the U. M. W. The information was laid by him for purposes in connection with the strike.

J. J. Ritchie said the defense had a right to know what was contained in them. The magistrate suggested that notice be given to the prosecution. The Coal Company counsel said they wanted the deposition at once, but this was opposed by the prosecution. The magistrate replied he did not know what the defence reserved his decision.

General Manager Duggan was not present, the Coal Company officials saying they did not know he was expected till Tuesday.
