HOW TO SUCCEED

During the last few years, conditions in all lines of business, even professional life, have changed so completely that every man is waking up to the fact that in order to win success he must specialize and learn to do some one thing and do it well.

It is with any article that is sold to the people. It must have genuine merit or no amount of advertising will maintain the demand for the article.

For many years we have watched with much interest the remarkable record maintained by Dr. Kilmear's Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy.

It is a physician's prescription. They have on file thousands of letters received from former sufferers who are now enjoying good health as a result of its use.

Countess of Rothes, Who Was Rescued From The Titanic—Family Nearly Ruined by Funeral Bills

The rescue of the Countess of Rothes from death by drowning, on the occasion of the sinking of the White Star steamer Titanic adds one more chapter, to the long list of thrilling episodes in the history of the house of Leslie, one of the oldest in Scotland, a history, a plain record of the bare events of which would throw into shade the wildest stories that any writer of fiction could dare weave into his stories.

Lord Rothes arrived in the United States about two months ago. I think it was the beginning of February, with the intention of obtaining data regarding the question whether telegraph service, administered by the state in England, is superior in efficiency and gives greater satisfaction to the public than that furnished in the United States by private enterprise.

There is a great difference of opinion on this subject in England, where it forms a continual and somewhat heated subject of discussion. Therefore, a man with a knowledge founded on experience and personal investigation, is naturally listened to with attention.

Lord Rothes is a nice young fellow, well set up, with pleasant face and manners. He manifested considerable amusement on being asked by the reporters on landing, whether it was really true that he held the title of hereditary boot-jack to the King of Scotland, as set forth in a letter printed on the day of his arrival.

He admitted that he had certain prerogatives which might be construed as equivalent to the office of hereditary boot-jack to the King of Scotland, as the Earl and the Duke of Rothes have, for several hundred years, possessed in the family the hereditary right of removing the sovereign's boots on his return after any royal chase in Scotland.

This was—and has not ceased to be—a highly honorable office, for in early times a royal hunt was as great a pastime as nowadays is the monarch's procession to open parliament, or to hold some great military review, or to attend some grand jubilee did not come to an end until the monarch had been restored to his private apartments and had been duly attended with his slippers, change of clothing, etc.

It is a fact that the monarch admitted one of his intimates to approach him while he was in such a defenceless condition, showed that he had the utmost confidence in his loyalty.

The present Lord Rothes has been so delighted with his visit to the United States that, instead of returning home ten days ago, as originally planned, he remained and sent for Lord Rothes, in order that he might obtain a personal idea of what he had seen, and of the conditions that had existed in the country.

The fact that the Duke of Rothes has for two or three centuries been greatly embarrassed as a monetary matter, is a financial matter dating from the reign of Charles II.

The income derived from his property has numerous calls upon it, in the way of annuities to younger sons, etc.

Thus, the late Countess of Rothes, grandmother of the present earl, died in 1870 at the age of ninety-three, left eighteen children and grand-children, all of whom had to be provided for, in addition to other beneficiaries who had been named in settlements prior to her time.

Almost Ruined by Funeral Bills But the most severe blow to the wealth of the family occurred in the reign of Charles II, or perhaps it would be more correct to say in that of James II. Down to the reign of Charles II, the family was immensely rich; but the seventh earl had the misfortune to be on terms of intimate friendship with Charles II, who overwhelmed him with honors, bestowing upon him the Dukedom of Rothes and the high commissioner of Scotland, an office resembling that of viceroy.

It was while in possession of these honors that the duke died, in Edinburgh, which is a considerable distance from the family mansion, Leslie House, King Charles insisted that, as the duke had died as his representative, he should be accorded all the funeral honors of a full-blooded sovereign, and that his remains should be conveyed, in royal state, at the expense of the crown, from the capital of Scotland, to Leslie House.

This involved, of course, an immense retinue of attendants, their suitable entertainments, at the various stopping places, and at their journey's end, their mourning outfit, etc.

Indefinite the funeral expenses, and when they came to a close, Charles II, was dead, and James II, had ascended the throne. He had always detested the Duke of Rothes, and finally returned to honor the royal promise of his predecessor, the "Merrie Monarch," refusing to pay the huge bills for the funeral expenses, adding that in view of the fact that the Rothes family were so rich, they could much better afford to pay for the duke's interment, than he, James, could himself.

The Rothes family declined to enter into legal proceedings against the crown about the matter, and assumed the expense themselves, mortgaging their property to the hilt in order to do so. Although it is said, the expenses of the funeral amounted to $18,000,000—a big enough sum now, but an almost fabulous one in those days; and a very grievous burden, although the family owned vast estates in Scotland, extending from one end of the kingdom to the other.

These charges, placed on the property so long ago, were not entirely cleared off until the marriage of the present earl to the daughter and heiress of the exceedingly wealthy Thomas Edwards of Brinknash Park, Gloucestershire. Then possession of the Leslie House property, which had been in alien hands for more than two centuries was resumed.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

It is a very common thing for people to regulate their table diet in one way or another. One person tries to eat things that will make him fatter; another endeavors to select a bill of fare which will reduce his weight; an athlete eats muscle building foods, and so on.

Now, since we know the beneficial effects of regulation in this direction, is it not strange that we do not more often regulate our diet in other things besides food?

A young girl came home in a very unhappy mood from visiting some friends, hearted people; the most emphatically, of the earth, earthy.

They think of little else besides clothes and opportunities to display them, and they spend all they can afford and a little more on keeping up appearances. Their visits to a girl with a very limited income but she has always managed to pay her bills, dress herself attractively, and be quite as good as her friends.

There are those who always turn their attention towards clothes. We talk clothes with them, looking at their new things, tell them about ours and some hope thinking of something that clothes and fashions and appearances.

We have other friends who stimulate us intellectually; they are reading and studying; they are interested in the topics of the day, they are trying to solve some corner of the world's problems, and contact with them makes us think that such things are really worth while after all.

Again we have friends who always send us away feeling mighty pleased with ourselves; and others who make us thoroughly ashamed of our judgment. We have friends whose strenuous temperaments galvanize us into the desire for constant action; and others who impart some of their own serenity and patience to us.

When we take the contagion of their care-free optimism, and others who make us a little more keenly alive to the value of life, and who give us a new perspective on our self love, know enough to avoid those who will give us a new perspective on our self love, know enough to avoid those who will give us a new perspective on our self love.

To regulate one's diet of vicarious life, to regulate one's diet of vicarious life, to regulate one's diet of vicarious life, to regulate one's diet of vicarious life.

RECENT DEATHS Many friends in the city and province will read with regret of the death of O. Slipp, which occurred last evening at Fenwick, Duke street, after a lingering illness. Mr. Slipp had been prominent in many ways. He was also deeply interested in church and Sunday school work, and his many Christian qualities endeared him to his family, friends and business associates alike.

He was born June 21, 1849, at Cambridge, Queens county, the son of the late Robert Slipp, and was a fine type of the country lad who made good in the world of business affairs. He was graduated from the University of New Brunswick and after leaving college entered the employ of the New Brunswick Railway. Later he was with the Maritime Bank, remaining with that institution until his death, after which he was secretary to the liquidators. He then joined the staff of the Halifax Banking Company, where he remained until the amalgamation with the Canadian Bank of Commerce, when he accepted a responsible position.

Mr. Slipp is survived by his wife, Miss Annie McLeod, second daughter of the late Matthew McLeod; two daughters, Mrs. Ferguson, wife of Rev. R. W. Ferguson, of Massachusetts, and Mrs. E. Fenwick; and three sisters, Mrs. Maxwell, of California; Mrs. Colwell, of Cambridge; and Miss Helen Slipp, a single nurse at Lowell (Mass.).

The funeral is to be at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon from the residence of his son-in-law, E. R. Fenwick, 137 Duke street.

Mrs. Eliza J. Dinmore, wife of James Dinmore, died last evening at her residence, 277 Princess street, after a brief illness of pneumonia. She was 70 years of age, and a daughter of the late John Ross, of Digby county (N. S.). Her husband is survived by two sons, James E. and Arthur S., of this city, and two daughters, Mrs. E. E. Dunlop, and Mrs. H. Dunlop, both of this city. The funeral will be Sunday afternoon.

At Pleasant Point, early this morning, the death of Miss B. Collins occurred after a lingering illness. She was 67 years of age, and a daughter of the late George F. Smith, of Woodstock, and two sons, Charles and Donald, of Rotheson, Me., and Percy of Montreal.

Stephen Peabody of Woodstock passed away there yesterday. He had lain down after dinner to sleep. He was seventy-nine years of age. He is survived by his wife, a sister of George F. Smith, of Woodstock, and two sons, Charles and Donald, of Rotheson, Me., and Percy of Montreal.

Daily Hints For the Cook

VERMONT STRABOUL: Mix one egg, one cupful of sour cream, one level teaspoonful of soda, one fourth teaspoonful each of cinnamon, nutmeg, and salt, and two scant cupfuls of flour. Bake in a shallow pan and serve warm.

SUNSHINE GEMS: These are to be mixed in given order and baked in hot gem pans. One egg, one cup sweet milk, two cups of bread flour in which has been sifted two tea spoons cream tartar and one-teaspoon of soda, one third cup of melted butter.

ALMOND CAKE: Mix one and a half cupfuls of sugar and one half cupful of butter. Add one half cupful of milk, two cupfuls of flour sifted with one teaspoonful each of baking powder, the whites of six eggs and one half cupful of almonds, chopped fine. Frost and split almonds on top.

APPLE DUMPLING BAKED: Three-fourths pound of flour, one quarter pound beef marrow, tinted apples, whole dry. Mix to a stiff paste with a little cold water. Divide the paste into three pieces. Open a tin of apples, place two halves and one clove on each piece of paste previously rolled out, and work the paste round the apple with your hands so that no joint can be discovered. Bake on a greased tin for three quarters of an hour. A dish for three persons.
