CHILDREN OF CAPE BRETON
STRIKERS BEGGING BREAD

GLACE BAY, N. S., Sept. 19.—The prospects for the strike at the collieries of the Dominion Coal Company ending shortly are brighter now than they have been for some time. The United Mine Workers now realize generally that they are thoroughly beaten. With their scant food allowance giving them only the bare necessities of life and forced to go into the woods and cut down trees to obtain fuel, the strikers are beginning to wonder what will be their circumstances when winter sets in.

About one hundred families are now living in various quarters, some of them even in barns, and after the ten weeks' struggle they see the Coal Company is in a strong position as ever. While the coal supply at the different banking stations had been practically exhausted now the collieries are gradually producing greater tonnage, and the officials of the company anticipate that they will wind up the St. Lawrence season in very good shape. In four or five weeks now shipments up the Gulf will practically cease and then the company's intention is to commence banking at once in preparation for next season. This means that there will be steady and continuous work for all the men in the pits this winter, and seventeen hundred men now walking the streets here are seriously reflecting on what their situation will be if they do not go back to work before the shipping season ends.

What might possibly be the preliminary to the end of the strike took place on Saturday afternoon when Premier Murray and Messrs. Kendall and Gillis, local members met a committee of men and discussed the whole situation. At the close of the conference Premier Murray stated that nothing had been suggested towards ending the strike and that the whole meeting had been simply to talk over the situation. No proposals of any kind had been submitted and he had not been asked to interfere in any way.

Unless the strike comes to an end very soon the prospects for the men now on strike are about as bad as they can possibly be. The allowance given for food is just sufficient for their actual wants. Some of the people are getting along all right on this, but others are not, and tales of little children coming to camps of the troops and asking for food are heard very frequently.

The situation of these families who have been evicted from their homes is also very bad. Some of them have gone into other houses, but many have been forced to take the barest of any kind of a shack. What will happen to these people if they are in the same situation in mid-winter is a problem that is looming up very prominently now.

The fuel question is also one which is assuming much importance. Fence poles, boards, and in fact, anything that will burn are being used now and the main occupation of many of the men is going to the woods to cut down the wood. There is not very much hardwood in Cape Breton and spruce is the main fuel used now.

When the strike was called early in July, many of the men who went out thought they were in for a picnic. Nearly three months have passed away since then, and the prospects of them winning recognition are no better than on July 6th. The number of strikers has dwindled considerably since that date. A close computation places the number now out of work at 1,750. Many have left the country and others have gone back to work, while the prospects are that more will return every day.

NOT COMING BROKE

An illustration of the money which emigrants are conveying into Canada is given in a statement by Mr. N. B. Colcock, the representative in London of the Ontario Government's Immigration Department. While every settler must possess $25 on arrival, Mr. Colcock has sent over within the last few weeks an emigrant with $12,500, six with $5,000 or more, one with $1,000, three with $250, and quite a crowd with sums ranging all the way between $250 and $500. The sum thus gained by Canada during the last three months or so, through that single office, would be little if anything less than $100,000.

PREMIER CAUGHT BY SUFFRAGISTS

Extraordinary Incidents of His Visit to Lympne Castle

Women Scale Walls--Free Fights and Appeals to the Police by Mr. Gladstone.

Mr. Asquith, who spent the weekend with his family in the solitude of the castle of Lympne, eight miles from Folkestone, had an experience that can never have fallen to any previous premier. Three suffragists tracked him out and behaved in such a manner that he was obliged to leave the castle. He was quite a chase, and as he reached the top step one of my companions caught him in the doorway. He tried to push her away, but she was too quick for him, and caught hold of his collar. Then a real fight ensued. Mr. Asquith called Mr. Gladstone, who came rushing out. "It was a real old jostle. There they were, trying to push us out, and we were endeavoring to get in. Blows were struck, and Mr. Gladstone fought like a pugilist. It got more serious; Mr. Gladstone lunged out and we lunged out, for we were determined not to be pushed down the steps by them."

The worst was to come. Mr. Gladstone returned to the castle, and the party sat down to dinner and were about to partake of coffee when they were startled by a great crash, and two large pieces of granite were thrown into the room, breaking two panes of glass, but fortunately hurting no one. The butler, the chauffeur and other servants rushed out, but the assailants had disappeared in the gloom.

THE WOMEN'S STORY. According to the suffragist organization, the three women were Miss J. Kenny, Miss Elsie Howie, and Miss Vera Westworth.

"He (the Premier) was slipping through a side door," said Miss Kenny. "When we caught him, he was wedged in the door, and a little struggle ensued, in which Mr. Asquith lost his hat. We got hold of his arm and tried to pull him back into the churchyard, but he escaped through the door, and it was barged in our faces. Not a word was said. Mr. Asquith was so quick, and I all occurred so hurriedly."

Explaining the subsequent incident at the Links, she said: "We stationed ourselves near the entrance to the clubhouse on the golf course, and waited until the golfers began to leave. Almost the last to go were Mr. Asquith and Mr. Gladstone and some other men. The place was almost deserted, and everything was quiet. The sun was setting; it was the time when people were just beginning to think about dinner. The Prime Minister's party approached the clubhouse, and we saw Mr. Asquith's motor-car drive round to the entrance. "Undetected, we stood close to the clubhouse and as the Prime Minister was descending the steps one of us sprang forward and caught hold of his arm. He turned and simply ran up the steps, and we ran after him. He was quite a chase, and as he reached the top step one of my companions caught him in the doorway. He tried to push her away, but she was too quick for him, and caught hold of his collar. Then a real fight ensued. Mr. Asquith called Mr. Gladstone, who came rushing out. "It was a real old jostle. There they were, trying to push us out, and we were endeavoring to get in. Blows were struck, and Mr. Gladstone fought like a pugilist. It got more serious; Mr. Gladstone lunged out and we lunged out, for we were determined not to be pushed down the steps by them."

"I don't think the Prime Minister received any bruises, but Miss Howie's arm was scratched. We all came down the steps somehow, and by this time the women were out of breath. A man held us, and Mr. Asquith and Mr. Gladstone entered the car and drove away. Before they went I shouted out to Mr. Asquith. 'Worse will happen to you unless you stop heaping these indignities on women.'"

ESCAPE IN A BOAT. In the evening the suffragists rowed back on the canal to Lympne, and, leaving their boat concealed under the bank, climbed the castle wall. "We helped ourselves to the castle," said Miss Kenny, "and we had a lot of slips and scrambles, falls and tumbles. As we reached to within a short distance of two open windows, from which light streamed, we judged by the sounds of the table furniture that the party were at dinner, but I cannot say whether Mr. Gladstone was there. We did not listen to the talking, because we would not have disturbed them. We simply went about our work at once. "One of us was hoisted up to a window and peeped through, and saw them at dinner. She reported her observations, and standing on the wall, we decided upon our plan of action. Up again we hoisted her, ad, thrusting her head through the window, she cried, 'Mr. Asquith! Mr. Asquith!' and peering up until you give women the vote.' And then the window was smashed with stones. "How we got down off the all and scrambled over the fences and through the ditches I don't know. We heard a commotion behind us in the castle, and a man's voice on the terrace cried out, 'There they go, down the steps.' We got quickly into our boat and looked behind us. The glare of lanterns, yellow, red, and green, flashed about the castle grounds, and voices called. But they never thought of casting the light on the canal or looking for us there. And so we got away."

An official version of the affair denies that Mr. Gladstone struck the women. Four suffragists were sent to prison for two months and one for one month (on Monday, at Manchester, on declining to pay the fines for wilful damage at the White City, Manchester, on Saturday, on the occasion of the budget demonstration by Mr. Birrell--Lloyd's Weekly.

A SMART SCHEME FOR GETTING CHEAP MONEY

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 18.—In the suit of Fred G. Austin, receiver of the defunct brokerage firm of Cameron, Currie and Company, against Hayden, Stone and Company, of Boston, F. H. McPherson, expert accountant, testified today that frequently when Cameron, Currie and Company ordered stock sent on by Hayden, Stone and Company, they would draw upon the eastern firm at the same time. This draft would be cashed at a local bank and forwarded to Boston, where it would be dishonored until security had been forwarded and then the identical stock would be sent back to Hayden, Stone and Company. According to McPherson, Cameron, Currie and Company obtained by this means the use of more than $500,000 for short periods.

Evans was an engineer and intended to tour the Dominion. He was accompanied by Mrs. Evans.

The late Mr. Charlton is survived by a wife and four sons. The latter are William of California, George of Bangor, Me., and Frank and Frederick at home. The funeral will be on Tuesday from his late residence. Interment will be at Cedar Hill cemetery.
