MR. HAGGART FEELS STING OF THE LASH APPLIED BY HON. H. R. EMMERSON.

Member for Westmorland Makes an Excellent Speech in the House of Commons-Mean Attack Made in His Absence from House-The McManus Letter.

Ottawa, April 25—(Special)—It was anther maritime province day in the house commons. The I. C. R. was again under American territory to reach the maritime coesdings was a speech from Hon. H. Emmerson (Westmorland). Mr. Emmerson then pointed out that traducing the Intercolonial had to be left to men like Mr. Barker, of Hamilton, who never travelled over the Intercolonial. He (Barker) never were so far as Moncton.

Schen he does he commands the attention of both sides of the house. His speech oday was an excellent one. He started out by saying that but for the way in which his name was marking his name was marking his name. which his name was mentioned last evening he would not have troubled the house, because his physician had asked him to avoid excitement. It might, however, be expected, in addition to this, that, as he expected, in addition to this, that, as he immersor the heard of the expected in addition to this, that, as he immersor to the expected in addition to this, that, as he immersor to the expected in addition to this, that, as he immersor that there were thousands of dollars expected, in addition to this, that, as he immersor that there were thousands of dollars expected. represented a railway centre, he should have something to say when so important a subject was discussed. place, he would like to call attention that the I. C. R. was one of the essential features of the coming into confederation of the maritime provinces. It was the stepping stone upon which they entered the threshold of the dominion. As such, the people of the maritime provinces, as well as those of the dominion generally, would be very much interested in this question.

He did not complain of the efforts made to people the great west, but he would just remind the house that there were marsh lands in the maritime provinces that would compare favorably for fertility with the prairie lands of the west.

In his own opinion, it was one of the best assets that the government of Canada's control of view, might not be large, but the benefits were incalculable. Mr. Emmerson then proceeded to draw a word picture of how little the maritime provinces, he happened to know, was off a very appreciative character. The Intercolonial was contributing towards the dominion before confederation. They knew Montreal from their geography, and sup

Attacking the Road is Folly.

It ought to be apparent to all of them, and it was utter folly for the opposition to be attacking the government road. They should approach the matter in a national spirit and in no carping way. It was said that the Conservatives were the great imperialists, but as far as the Intercolonial was concerned they did not approach it in a Canadian spirit. He wondered how his friends from the maritime provinces viewed the remarks of Mr. Haggart on the Intercolonial. The attempt to discredit the government road could not be endorsed by the Conservatives of the house.

Halihe promotion and furtherance of the from grests of the Intercolonial was on a Side with the fostering of that inter-comperishication between people which was the spirit of the age. When the builders of confederation had arranged for the building of the Intercolonial as a means of communication between the older provinces they had, no doubt, in their minds the idea that in the future it would be still further extended westward and would do for the new and growing provinces of the west what it had done for the provinces down by the sea. If anyone wanted to visit Montreal, he had to go by way of Portland. Now all this was changed. It was the construction of the I. C. R. that brought about this change. It was not necessary for him to mention all the advantages which were derived from the intercourse and intercommunication which followed the building of the railway.
