Bruns' role: Defined but indefinite

There seems to be a consensus then, as to the role of The Brunswickan. The student body, (when it chooses to comment) has said very little to The Brunswickan this year. What has been said has been mostly negative, but it seems to be felt, that, as Jim, Murray put it "it is on a par with other years".

The staff almost unanimously will say that the paper has been 'fair to middlin' this year. Certainly not as good as one would have hoped, but by and large not too bad.

Ed Werthmann stated that "the paper this year has been pretty good in an -- all sense, money and the production of the paper have been good, however there have been problems." For the rest of the year the "dedication of the staff will tell the story."

Judy Orr felt that this year has reflected "improvements in certain things, for example financially, and the aquisition of new equipment which is a big help in the educational process." Judy points out, however that the changes have meant "a lot more work for the staff, and this causes a lot of problems."

Sheenagh Murphy feels that in some instances, the paper has been "wishy-washy with respect to the articles that are appearing, because there are not enough people to write stories."

The future of The Brunswickan depends on people. As Derwin Gowan (Managing Editor Arts 4, Bruns 4) put it, "it is hard to say what the changes will be". Most feel that the paper will continue, but the lack of experienced staff will cause a decline in the quality of the paper. Tom Best noted that "next year will be a very trying year for whomever is editor."

Jack Trifts (Business 2, Bruns 1) stated that the "long-term future of The Brunswickan is a very variable thing, so it is speculative to make projections, The Brunswickan is the people who make it up." Judy Orr maintains that the Brunswickan has "always been here, but I'm not certain where it will go, because it depends on the people who come out to

The Brunswickan seems to be at a point where only an infusion of interested new staff coupled with the willingness of some of the few experienced staff will maintain it at a point where its standards can be kept up.

The Brunswickan has always been here, probably it will continue. There remains the fact that fifteen people cannot continue to put out a paper every week of the school year with absolutely no response from the university community which it trys to serve.
