POETRY

A FOOLISH MAN

A foolish man killed an eagle once,
Because he knew not how to fly.
He tore up poems and burned
The books of love he could not grasp.
The dove of peace was an enemy,
And he tore out its innocent heart.
In the fields he crushed the flowers,
Because of the sweetness he could not smell.
Then from the cold dark sky,
A bright star shone just for him.
He felt warm and safe within its rays,
And held it close to his heart.
Now he loves and laughs and is quite content,
When the star is at his side.
The love and joy are changing him,
Sweet flowers he lays at her feet.
But courage and patience she must have,
For he remains a foolish man.
