CLOSE OBSERVERS.

Savages Note Things to Which Civilized Eyes Are Blind.

Savages are supposed to have keener senses, especially a keener sense of sight, than civilized races. The author of "Idle Days in Patagonia" does not accept this theory. He believes that savages have no keener senses, but that they pay closer attention to what comes within the range of their perception. As an instance of quick response to an impression he tells the following story:

On March 12, 1861, a company of hunters were camping beside a grove of willows in Patagonia. About 9 o'clock that evening, while they were seated round the fire roasting their ostrich meat, Sosa suddenly sprang to his feet and held his open hand high above his head for some moments.

"There is not a breath of wind blowing," he exclaimed, "yet the leaves of the trees are trembling. What can this portend?"

The others stared at the trees, but could see no motion, and they began to laugh at him. Presently he sat down again, remarking that the trembling had ceased, but during the rest of the evening he was very much disturbed in his mind. He remarked repeatedly that such a thing had never happened in his experience before, for, he said, he could feel a breath of wind before the leaves felt it, and there had been no wind. He feared that it was a warning of some disaster about to overtake their party.

The disaster was not for them. On that evening occurred the earthquake which destroyed the distant city of Mendoza and crushed 12,000 people to death beneath the ruins.

The subterranean wave extended east to the Plata and southward into Patagonia was afterward known, for in the cities of Rosario and Buenos Ayres clocks stopped, and a slight shock was also experienced in the Carmen on the Rio Negro.

PEOPLE WHO APPEAR OLD.

How They May Preserve the Beauty and Freshness of Youth.

People who appear old must expect to be considered so, and, if they apply for positions with every appearance that senility has struck them and that they have gone beyond the point of no return, they cannot expect favorable consideration. If gray haired applicants for positions would only appreciate the value of appearance and would "brace up" when they seek situations—go "well groomed" and well dressed, with elastic steps, showing that they still possess force, and enthusiasm—they would eliminate an obstacle greater than their gray hairs.

We think ourselves into incapacity by looking for signs of age and dwelling on them, and the body follows the thought. We should, therefore, avoid the appearance of age in every possible way—by dress, carriage, conversation and especially by our attitude toward people and things. It is not difficult to preserve the buoyancy and freshness of youth, but it must be done by constant effort and practice. A musician who expects to make only one or two important appearances a year must keep up his practice. Youthfulness cannot be put on for a day if old age has had a grip on you for months.

It is important to preserve the fire of youth as long as possible, to carry freshness and vigor into old age by keeping up a hearty interest in everything that interests youth. Many of us seem to think that youthful sports and pastimes are foolish, and before we know it we get entirely out of sympathy with all young life, and consequently really old, whatever our years. We must think youthful thoughts, associate with young people and interest them. When a person ceases to interest the young he may be sure that he is showing signs of old age.

A Shrewd Client.

An amusing story is told among lawyers of a Wallonian peasant who had gone to law with a neighbor. In a conversation with his lawyer he suggested sending the magistrate a couple of fine ducks.

"Not for your life," said his adviser. "If you do you'll lose the case."

The judgment was given in his favor, when he turned to his lawyer and said, "I sent the ducks." Astonishment on the latter's part turned to admiration when his client continued, "But I sent them in my neighbor's name."

Simply Impossible.

"Have you got the plans for your new house completed yet?" some one asked him.

"Not quite," he replied. "There is a difference of opinion between my wife and me as to the interior arrangements. She says the pantry is too large and that there are too many closets."

Without another word the medal for the biggest lie of the evening was awarded to him.

His Idea Capacity.

"I read somewhere the other day," said Mr. Henpeck, "that one of the big mercantile corporations pays a certain man $1,000 for each idea he furnishes. George, I'd like to have a chance of that kind."

"Wretch!" exclaimed Mrs. Henpeck. "Do you want your innocent wife and child to starve?"

So Smart.

Gerald—May I kiss you?

Geraldine—Mother is in the next room.

Gerald—That's all right. Your father can kiss her.

It is a sign you are growing old when you read the obituary before the marriage notices.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Summer Pruning.

Summer pruning of grapes and other small fruits will soon need attention, and it is best done with the finger and thumb. In the case of grapes it is simply pinching out the fruiting spurs, shortening in the ends of the leading canes and pinching off all surplus buds that start up from the roots. The most popular way of training the grape is on the Fuller system, using three wires, one about twelve inches from the ground, one at the top of the trellis, about 4 1/2 feet from the ground, and the middle wire about half way between the two. The two main arms are tied to the bottom wire, and the canes grow from these to the top of the trellis. When they reach the top they are stopped by pinching off the terminal shoots.

Raspberries and blackberries should be pinched out 2 1/2 to 3 feet high. This stops the upward growth and, instead of a long, sprawling cane, you will have a stout, stocky one, with plenty of laterals, and it will carry its load of fruit without bending over. If the laterals grow too long they should be pinched back before the end of the season. This summer pruning can be done rapidly and easily.

When young apple or pear trees are being top-worked to some other variety, they should be examined often during summer, and the suckers or sprouts that come out below the grafts rubbed off after the grafts get a fair start, otherwise they will take the sap that should go to the graft to push it along. Where a graft has failed to grow it is well to allow a number of the shoots that come out near the end to grow in order to keep the limb alive and healthy, and next spring it can be re-grafted by cutting it off a little farther back; the end where the cleft is being covered and protected with wax, a few sprouts allowed to grow, will be found quite healthy and fit for grafting again when the time comes to do it.—London Farmers' Advocate.

A Story of Queen Victoria.

A youthful and newly-made equestrian was one day going the rounds of the Royal stables at Windsor, when he noticed a little old lady in a plain black dress and a basket on her arm, alone with a muckroom on her arm. Anxious to do his duty thoroughly he went up to her, and politely informing her that no outsiders were allowed within the Royal precincts, he conducted her with alacrity to the nearest exit, saying: "Her Majesty would be annoyed if she found you here when she comes to visit the horses."

"Quite so, quite so; I understand," replied the old lady smiling, and she departed with her basket on her arm, whilst the equestrian returned to his duties.

"What in the world were you doing with Her Majesty?" demanded a fellow-equestrian of mature years, who had noticed the scene from afar.

"What do you mean?" gasped the other, a sudden dread taking possession of him.

"Why I saw you talking to her very familiarly, I thought, and I want to know what it was all about, and why she went away so suddenly."

But the youthful courtier was too overcome to answer; he longed that his last hour might come there and then. But when next day he craved Her Majesty's pardon on bended knees, Queen Victoria laughingly exclaimed, "You were quite right to do your duty. But take a good look at me now, for I don't want to be turned out again."

The Little Girl Feared.

This little story is declared to be true, and we very much hope it is. It related to Jacob Grimm and runs: One of his prettiest tales ends with the words "Whoever refuses to believe this story owes me a thaler."

One winter morning a little Jewish girl rang the door bell and asked the servant if Herr Professor Jacob Grimm was at home. When informed that he was not, she said politely: "Will you please hand him this thaler when he returns?"

The servant took the coin, glanced at it curiously, and inquired who sent it, and what it was for.

"I owe him the money myself," said the little girl.

"Why? What for?"

"Because I don't believe the story about the wolf."

Beware of Strangers.

Sign no papers for any strangers or on any pretext in any circumstances on any promise of profit or for any other offered reason. Signatures are binding. You cannot expect the courts and juries to take your word against your signature.

Simply refuse, always and absolutely, to sign papers for traveling strangers who claim to be able and willing to enrich you suddenly and enormously. The bigger the signature the fatter the surety your signature will be to get you into trouble. Everything you need you can buy from established business concerns. Do not dicker with traveling strangers.—Midland Farmer.

IS IT PREJUDICE

That, Makes You Suffer from Dyspepsia When Others Tell You Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets Will Cure It, Sure.

"I have always had very strong objections to patent medicines, but the cures of Dyspepsia by Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets are wonderful. For two years my life had been a burden without having a pain across my stomach. Doctors did me no good. One box of Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets completely cured me. The Dyspepsia has never come back."

This is brief is the statement of Marie Ann Bujold, of Maria Cap, Bonaventure County, Quebec. Does it not strike home to you? Are not your prejudices against the so-called "patent" medicines causing you misery? Can't you overcome your prejudice and your Dyspepsia at the same time?

Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets will assuredly cure any case of Indigestion or Dyspepsia. They will digest the food themselves, giving the stomach a chance to rest up and return to its normal condition.

It jars a man to be informed that age is telling on his appearance.
