The man-o'-war's men made short work of the pirstee in the waist, and, all escap-ing, got into their boats and pulled for shore. Priming a carronade with a pistol cartridge, the Yankee sailors discharged it, cutting one boat in two, and in a mo-ment the water was allve with sharks taking care of the crew. The schoner was at once boarded by three boat crews. The docks were descri-ed, but all at once there came a deadly volley of musketry from the cabin, killing three men, and then a rush, headed by Pinto, a tall grizzield negro, powerfully built. He shot Lieutenant Hamilton through the body and was stacked by the wardroom steward of the Enterprise, a giant mulato from Baltimore. He, too, got a bullet, but struck Pinto's right arm off with a outlass siroke, and the villain was taken alive, the only survivor of his erw. Corwin's speech in the house in 1840, in reply to General Crary of Michigan, who had attacked the military record of Gen-eral Harrison, is still often referred to as a fine example of irony and sarcosm. It overed the unhappy Crary with ridicule, and even the sodate and serious John Quincy Adams, then in the house, referred to the victim immediately afterward as "the late Mr. Crary." But there were in nearly every one of Corwin's speeches some scintillations of wit or humor to en-liven the ordinarily dull debates, and whenever he took the floor the members were eager to listen. Speaking upon internal improvement of rivers, he said, "Your constitution is a fish that can live and thrive in a little tide creek which a thirsty mosquito would drink dry in a hot day." The Turret Battery. Early in this contury, in 1812, Colonel John Stevens conceived the idea of the construction of an iron plated vessel of war with a saucer shaped hull, propelled by sorvers so arranged as to give a rotary motion to the structure. The battery was to be of the heaviest ordnance of the time, and the plating heavy enough to resist the shot of similar guns at short range. The main purpose of the oraît was harbor de-fense and the plan of action was to moor the vessel by a chain leading down through the bottom of the ahip at its center, and to spin it around this center, fring gun after gun as it came in the line of fire, thus anticipating the later Timby turret, which in turn was the germ of the mod-ern "monitor" armorciad. Such a vessel was actually built half a century later by the Russian government and was a good representative of the first Stevens battery. —Cassior's Magasine. The Turret Battery.
