Mr. Charlesworth, the editor of The Matrimonial Post, regards the matters revealed as the every-day transactions of a recognized business, calling for no more astonishment than the operations of a servants' registry office. In a career of 34 years he has effected 14,000 marriages. Wedding bells, therefore, affect him no more than the signal bells on omnibuses. He discusses affairs of the heart—and the pocket—with the detached air of a family solicitor.

with the detached air of a family solicitor.

"No." he said to a London Tribune representative, "I cannot say I have any ill-feeling towards my amateur competitors. Often they are not competitors at all. They work in confunction with me, by providing introductions, and we share the commission. There are about twenty society people—some with titles—who assist me to bring the right parties together.
But they do not always play the game.
One lady wanted me to give her secretary a share of the commission. I replied that if she insisted on that I should insist on bringing my typist into the deal.

Makes conditions.

Agents in Society.

And how do I find my men of title?

Well, as I told you, I have my agents in society. And sometimes men of title approach me — not directly, but they approach me — not directly, but they approach me all the same. There is the head of a family which bears one of the oldest names in the three kingdoms. He wants £6,000 a year, and if his wife wishes it he will agree to leave her at the church door.

"The only trouble about arrangements of this kind is the difficulty of getting the money. It is necessary to have a precise agreement, and even there is no certainty that the obligation will be met. Here is a specimen contract note for cases of that kind," and Mr. Charlesworth, mentioning no names, turned up his letterbook, and produced the following copy of a letter:

"In consideration of the trouble and expense incurred by you in bringing about my introduction to a certain lay."

Out of that sum I received £500 as commission.

'I have brought off even bigger things than that—but I never got the money! What can you do if they refuse to pay You can only sue them in the county court for a small sum.

"Now the middle classes and the lower classes always pay up. We arrange a figure, and they sign a commission note for it. Here is one of my forms:

"In consideration of being introduced in the event of a marriage taking place between such lady and myself. I hereby, agree to pay to the said proprietor the sum of £10 on the date of my said marriage. And I also agree to pay to the said proprietor, after my said marriage. And I also agree to pay to the said proprietor, after my said marriage. And I also agree to pay to the said proprietor, after my said marriage. And I be such that such lady may possess at the time of marriage. And I bind myself, under a penalty of £50, to give the said proprietor immediate hotice of the fact that such marriage has taken place. And in case such immediate notice be not given, the said penalty, together with the commission as aforesaid, shall become due and payable to and recoverable by the said proprietor, as and for liquidated damages. And I further bind myself under a penalty of £50, not directly or indirectly to divulge or cause to be divulged to any person the names or identity of any of the ladies, clients of the said proprietor, whom the said proprietor may introduce to me, such sum of £50 to be recoverable as and by way of liquidated damages."

A Letter From Canada.

For corroborative testimony Mr. Charlesworth exhibited a letter received from Canada that morning, enclosing a bank-note for £50. He had married two sisters to two young Canadians of decent position. The Canadians called on him when in London, and left their photographs. In due course the ladies approached him and approved of the pictures. Correspondence followed; then wedding bells; and then commission. There was a convincing touch in one of Mr. Charlesworth's confidences. Very many of his clients are spinsters of a certain age and a certain income, whose fathers or mothers have married again and made home less comfortable than it used to be. Hitherto they have had no desire, or no opportunity, to marry. But the advent of a new ruler in the household makes the situation critical. Actresses need not apply. "They come," says Mr. Charlesworth, "but I don't want them. It always leads to awkwardness when the fact comes out."

Another refreshing confidence Another refreshing confidence was that many young women are married through the beneficent ageacy of Mr. Charlesworth without ever suspecting it. "Their parents consult me," he said. "and it is all done so delicately that the young lady knows nothing about it. One of my cilents is a retired manufacturer, with seven daughters. Owing to the illness of his wife they live very quietly and keep no society. But the father wants to see the girls settled in life, so he consults me, and I arrange meetings at some London hotel between him and likely gentlemen. I have got two of the girls off, and do not anticipate any difficulty as to the rest."

Gallery of Eligibles.

"I have given her any amount of desirable introductions, but no marriage takes place."

As a final mark of confidence Mr. Charlesworth unlocked a drawer, and exhibited a handful of photographs from his gallery of eligibles. The men were decidedly a good-looking lot-hunting men in pink, military officers in uniform, mayel officers with the executive curl, and naval surgeons without it. It happened but this was an accident—that amongst them the interviewer recognized an acquaintance of his own. The photographs of ladies ranged from a girl of 47, with hair down her back, to a handsome matron who will soon have to confess to 40. A curious thing about some of the pictures of ladies was that they were rather faded, and of a type that has gone out of fashlon. It seems that ladies frequently prefer their old photographs to their new ones.

Toronso, Oct. 13.—Mr. and Mrs. Walter Beardmore of St. George street discovered upon their return home Thursday from a brief trip to Acton that $2,000 worth of Jewelry, consisting of a diamond necklace, bracelets and rings, had been stolen from the house in their absence. The house was perfectly locked, as they had left it, but the plunder had been taken from the top drawer of Mrs. Beardmore's dresser, which had been broken into. The police have no clue to the robbery.

Mr. Charlesworth became regretful in talking about the disappointments of his profession. Some people are so very hard to please. He has on his books a widow of 35, with two adopted daughters, so well off that she keeps up a large place in the country, and permanent rooms in a West-end hotel. GRAND PRE EXPULSION.

set Evangeline and the Acadias.

Set Right in Canada Archives. Bot Right in Canada Archives.

By the poet Longfellow the story of the expulsion of the Acadians from Grand Pre. Nova Scotia, is told in such a way as to suggest that the deplorable event was provoked solely by the barbarity of the British rulers of the eastern provinces. But this is not an accurate view of the case. At all events, the new volume of the Archives of Canada, which give a mass of documents not hitherto printed on this subject, leaves a different impression. It is to be remembered that Acadia came to the British as a result of the Treaty of Utrecht. That treaty was signed in 1713, and it was in 1755 that the expulsion took place. expulsion took place.

Internecine Difficulties. What occurred during the 42 years

What occurred during the 42 years intervening? This period was one of internecine warfare in Acadia. The King of France was anxious to drive England out, and, with this end in view, the country was constantly harassed. In the operations against the English occupation the Indians were engaged, and there was at one time directly influencing them to raid the British settlements a French priest by the name of Le Loutre, whose correspondence with the French authorities is now published. Le Loutre writes, spondence with the French authorities is now published. Le Loutre writes, on July 29, 1749, to the French Minister that he is keeping the Indians busy with the English, who are being taught that no Eaglish settlement will be permitted in Acadia. If the English persist in their design to colonize there will never be peace, says Le Loutre. Meanwhile Le Loutre and other emissaries appear to have been exercising influence with the Acadians. Bigot reports to France in September, 1749, that the English are trying to induce the Acadians to take the oath of allegiance, and he adds that, if they do, they will have to take up arms against the Indians.

The Oath Question.

The Oath Question.

It seems clear that the English and the French were pulling the Acadians in opposite directions. The English wanted them to take the oath and to become British subjects in the fullest sense of the word, in order, no doubt, that they might offer resistance to the attempts of the Indians under Le Loutre and the French commanders to dislodge the British, On the other hand, the emissaries of France were persuading the Acadians to resist the oath and to leave the country rather than take it. They wanted the Acadians to be neutral, except when openly on the French side. The Acadians were willing to take a restricted oath, such as was given them in 1726, accompanied ing to take a restricted oath, such as was given them in 1726, accompanied by an assurance that they would not have to carry arms. But the oath and the assurance given by Governor Phillips were not agreeable to the rulers of a quarter of a century later. In all probability the circumstances had changed. What was regarded as unnecessary in 1726 may have been thought to be imperative in 1850 and thereabouts.

A Decided Refusal.

A Decided Refusal.

In 1755, owing to the pressure of the French, and the continued operations of the Indians, representative Acadians were called to Halifax to talk the matter over. The subject was discussed between Governor Lawrence and the Acadians, and the latter made reply. They said they had taken and and the Acadians, and the latter made reply. They said they had taken an oath of fidelity "with all the circumstances and reservations granted to us in the name of the King, and we are resolved, with one consent and one voice, to take no other oath." Another party declared that they would not take such an oath as that which was taken by the natural subjects of His Majesty, nor would they take one "which changes ever so little the conditions and the privileges obtained for us by our sovereigns and our fathers in the past." The Acadians here maintained that the oath taken in 1726, which exempted them from the defence of the country, was of the nature of a bargain with them, and they were opposing any deviation from that supposed compact.

ther colonies, and many remained there, while others returned when the trouble was over and became the ancestors of the splendid Acadian population we now have. There will nevor be a unanimous opinion touching the justice of this deplorable event in Canadian history. But everybody is bound to recognize that the Acadians, placed as they were between two strong contending powers, were in a very different position, and that they suffered for the conduct of others.
