"It has made my bloo lrun cold!" the lawyer says, with a shiver. "Come into my private room, and have a glass of sherry with me, Mr. Lindsay, will you? I feel that your news and your sarry together, have been rather too much for me!"

They go into the lawyer's private sanctum, where he produces a decanter of pale-brown sherry—sherry with a pertum nad a nutty flavor—and pours out two glasse full. "Aid do you mean to say the woman was never found—never brought to justice? After a cruel, cold bloodel murder like that!" Mr. Blamire asks, abruply, after staring silently at his untasted wine for several minutes.

"No, never. And never will be now!" Roderic says, wearily. asks, abruptly, after staring silently at his untasted wine for several minutes. "No, never. And never will be now!" Roderic says, wearily. "I came down to Europe with the wild idea of tracking her down, and I did succeed in finding what I thought were traces of her in some places abroad—in Havre, anl Brussels, and Antwerp. I had a man, a private detective, to help me, but either he was a duffer, or that she was too clever for us, or that we were on a false scent—which was the likeliest of all—we lost what clue we had, I think, in Antwerp, and—that's the end of that business! Unfortunately, it has had disastrous results in another direction, as she, that woman, not only made away with money, but papers also. Alec Lindsay's will for one; i myhich he had bequeathed to me the reversion of his share of the family estate held under his grandfather's will—a complicated business, which I won't take up your time to explain.

leaving England in a few days, you, see, Going to accompany an expedition of a few scientific men through Starks' Bay Settlement, and the Kimberley District. Sir Roger Allison's expedition."

"You have been staying at St. Cray's, Mr. Lindsay?" the lawyer asks, almost deferentially, "Then are you, may I ask, a relative of the Cardonnel family?"

"Well, I hardly call myself a relative," Roderic says, flushing darkly and frown. "Well, I hardly call myself a relative," Roderic says, flushing darkly and frowning, much to Mr. Blamire's surprise. He generally finds that an allusion to titled relatives produces on the countenance of clients an irradiation as of sunlight, from the joy of their souls. "My father, Keith Lindsay is a distant cousin of the Earl of Cardonnel; that is all."

"Isn't your father, Mr. Keith Linday, the next heir to the title, Mr. Lindy?" asks the lawyer, quietly.
"Oh yes; I believe he is," Rodoric says, naturally quiet manner and with lips that have grown pale.

"Ay, Lady Christabel, of course!" Mr. Blamire says, watching him keeuly, and drawing conclusions at a rapid rate. "A most charming girl, too! Very pretty, and as good as she is pretty, I believe!" "Yes, I dare say," Roderic rejoins, rather indistinctly, and staring gloomily at the Turkish rue of blues and reds.

"Yes, I dare say," Roderic rejoins, rather indistinctly, and staring gloomily at the Turkish rug of blues and reds. "I only know her slightly."

"You know her too well, I should say, my young friend, by the look of you, the lawyer says, mentally. "You are Mr. Robert—no—Roderic Lindsay?" he asks, curiously regarding him. "It is rather stupid of me to have forgotten your name. My partner, Mr. Feardon, would have known better, You are Roderic Lindsay, eldest son of Mr. Keith Lindsay, of Mount Lindsay, Swan River Settlement, Australia? Of course: Mr. Feardon would have recollected you in a moment, as soon as he heard your name. He is not in town to-day, as it happens. An old and valued client of ours is a great friend of yours, Mr. Lindsay," the lawyer announces, with a very peculiar smile, "Miss Lydia Surtees!"

Greatly to his surprise and greatly to his vexation, his news does not seem to aford his visitor the least satisfaction. Roderic's face, indeed, grows colder and harder, and a cynical smile comes

Albion Hotel, and James Henderson, of the Grand Central. The cases were enabled in the Grand Central. The cases were enabled in the State of a private detective from Toronto, engaged by a local committee, and are amongst about domaintance of a few weeks' standing, if you like; but—"

"Exactly. At the Hotel du Louvre you met her!" Mr. Blamire interposes rather earnestly and watching Roderic's every expression and gesture with an unwavering keenness. "Why do you say she is no friend of yours? She gave me the impression" he adds very deliberately, with a rather displeased, sardonic smile, "of being a very good friend of yours—a very good friend, indeed!"

"Indeed?" Roderic asks, looking really youzled, and gazing frankly at the law-protections, as an experience of the part.

"A nice young fellow! A capital young fellow, that Lindsay!" Mr. Blamire says to himself, as he goes back to his quiet, dull office once more. "I don't wonder at Lydia Surtees quite so much! Not but a look as a l at Lydia Surtees quite so much: Not out it is madness of her any way one looks at it, and I'm afraid I'll tell her so again, and vex her worse than I did last time. Why, the young fellow is a good twenty years younger that she, I verily believe!"

"He must be, since the earl has only a daughter—Lady—dear me! What is her name? Annabel? Caribel?"
"Christabel," Roderic says, n an unaturally quiet manner and with lips that have grown said that her are grown and the state of the covernment will attempt to show that institution, formally opened to-day. The Government will attempt to show that Walsh took from the Chicago National Bank, the Equitable Trust Co., and the Home Savings Bank $14,000,000. In his statement to the jury Attorney Dobyns declared that Walsh obtained the ownership of various large properties without cost to himself by using the funds of the banks.

He said: "Watered stock to the probable amount of $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 was issued. Mr. Walsh through em-

He then sold this stock to the banks, taking the money to build up his private enterprises. All of the stock so sold by Mr. Walsh was practically valueless. It was also the practice of Mr. Walsh to make loans to one of his companies, and then sell the bonds of that company to the bank. These bonds were practically worthless."

Rescued After Being Entombed Underground For Days.

Pettsville, Pa., Nov. 13.-Imprisoned for 87 hours, several hundred feet beneath the surface of the earth, almost directly under his own home, where his wife and children mourned for him as dead, Michael McCabe, of Gilberton, was to day taken from his tomb in the Drap-er mine, barely alive, after one of the most marvelous rescues in the history of most marvelous rescues in the history of anthracite mining.

Since Saturday afternoon, when the top of the chamber in which he was working caved in and caused a rush of culim and water from the surface, relays of workmen toiled unceasingly to reach him. Shortly after midnight the rescuers detected a scratching noise, which told them that McCabe was still living, and with renewed vigor fresh reliefs were put to work, and at 5 a. m. he was reached.

YOUNG GIRL SHOT DEAD.

A Painful Tragedy at Traverse

Picton, Nov. 13.—A sad accident occurred at Point Traverse, this county, to-day. The two children of a Mr. Farrington, Viola, aged sixteen, and her younger brother, were alone in the house. Viola was in one room and her brother in another. The brother states he heard a rifle shot and upon going into the room where his sister was found her dead with a rifle lying beside her. She had, it is supposed, been playing with the gun, which was loaded, and accidentally discharged it, killing herself instantly.

Sir Lewis Morris was a graduate of Oxford, where he had a distinguished career. By profession he was a barrister, but practised chiefly as a conveyancing counsel.

His fame rests on his poetic works, among which are "Songs of Two Worlds," "The Epic of Hades," "The Ode of Life," "Sonbs of Britain," "A Vision of Saints," "Idylls and Lyrics," and "A Harvest Tale."

He was also the author of many articles on literary and educational subjects. He was created a knight in 1895, and was deputy chancellor of the University of Wales.

It was from a poem by Sir Lewis Morris that Sir Wm. Mulock, as Postmaster-General, selected the line, "We hold a vaster empire than has been," which was placed upon the special stamp issued by Canada to commemorate the inauguration of imperial penny postage.

furnaces when suddenly an explosion took place which shook the building. All the employees rushed out of the building, which was full of steam and smoke. Customs Collector The Peck, who has quarters in the ond flat, summoned the plumbers, on going into the cellar, stumbled the body of Mr. Barrett. He immediately taken upstairs and doctors summoned. The injured man was found to have sustained a frightful gash or to have sustained a frightful gash of his head and other serious injuries. The reason assigned for the explosion is that the water in the boiler was ex-hausted. How the caretaker escaped with his life is a miracle.

dealers in Berlin have reduced the price of milk to six cents per quart again.

Last Friday the consumers were notified that the price hereafter would be seven cents per quart, and those who had run out of tickets have since paid the increased price.

The housekeeper and consumer, however, decided in a large number of cases to use less milk, and instead of the vendor calling every day they have been asked to call every other day. As a consequence the supply of milk was greater than the demand.

On Tuesday and to-day the majority of vendors reduced the price.
