IMPROVING THE EYEBROWS.

When the eyebrows are very light or white, they are rarely becoming. Their owner cannot be blamed for fretting over them and seeking to improve their colorless outlines. The eyebrow pencil can be called into service every day or several times a day, but other women employ a little hair dye, thus staining the hair more or less permanently or at least so that its renewing need not be every day.

After a little practice, this can be done delicately and satisfactorily, a light hand and deft touch being the two requisites. When the brows are heavy or grow uneven they can be properly narrowed and arched by electrolysis. This is only permanent way of removing objectionable hairs. Many girls have the hairs out with their tweezers, but if the brows are dark they often get a bluish effect to the skin, when they begin to grow again. They also look stubby and ugly when they first put through the skin.

The brows should be shaped according to the shape and size of the face, a slender delicate can stand a narrow arched brow. A broad face should have wider brows. It requires artistic eye to properly shape the brows according to the shape of the face, therefore care should be exercised in the choice of an operator. Drooping eyebrows, wide apart, said to bespeak good nature. Roman nose is indicated by arched eyebrows, while eyebrows high above the nose are declared to be an evidence of intolerance. Other eyebrows construes red eyebrows as prophecy of ambition, black eyebrows as intensity of character.

But "all signs fall" in such matters, sooner or later, as we meet with and varied types which show that the back story of such people has been an intermixture of many varieties.

THE BUNDLE.

WALT MASON

By ceaseless industry and thrifty by management and care, I have raised a bundle hard to lift, many bones a there. While others have a bulky thing made the globe clank I labor for the lucious time, and store in the b a a Through burning days and dim nights I toiled with weary tread while other fellows saw the light and staid the landscape red. So I detest the whiskered pup who comes from stale saloons, to say we ought to divvy up our store of playtime. We will attach a fancy name to each he may parade, but it's the same old holdup game the thieves have always played. The same old hopes forever, burn in lawless people's souls, gather coin they do not earn, and swipe their neighbors' rolls. So long as there's a planet here, some men will practice thrift, and other men with threat for beer, will talk and drift. And while this planet stays, I abide the bums will always say, the thrifty fellows should divide or die, their way away. I've pushed them and piled the flail and ironed the setting hen, and trimmed the tree and split the rail, to gain my iron mine. And wild eyed anarchists may roam may threaten, plead and whine, and thunder loudly at the door, but I have a mine.

The Sugar Question

Free trading in sugar is now granted to all importers, the only requirement being to get permits from the F. C. Board, in accordance with the regulations made by the Governor-in-Council on Nov. 20th last. This concession is made because the sugar distribution is no longer of such a serious character as it was in the days of war and since then. This decision was given by the Board on Saturday, and may determine as in days of peace how much to import. At Saturday's meeting Mayor Gosling thanked the F.C.B. on behalf of the sugar importers for the fair dealing extended to them by Sir P. T. McGrath, the chairman, replied.

Church Lads' Brigade.

The first church parade of Avalon Battalion, C.I.B., was held yesterday for the year. The lads paraded at 10.15 in good strength and mustered 218 all ranks. Lieut.-Col. Goodridge was in command, with Adjutant Capt. J. A. Winter. The bugle band paraded in full force under Drum Major Burrell, and his lads provided excellent music. Lieut. Morris and the brass instruments were in good shape and supplied the music for the hymns at St. Michael's Church, where the service was held. The service was special and was in charge of Rev. Canon Field, who preached a fatherly and practical sermon to the lads from the text, "They who strive to be masterly must be temperate in all things." A return to the Armory was made via Cochrane Street and Military Road, where the parade was dismissed with the National Anthem. Lieut. Col. Goodridge announced that the annual competition for the "Cochrane Shield" takes place at 7.45 on Thursday. We also noticed that a new Drum Major was present yesterday in a regulation uniform, wearing a white helmet, and Drum Major H. Willar certainly knows his business as leader of the parade.

Records in Flying.

The Struggle to Gain Air Supremacy. Almost every week we hear of some new triumph of aircraft. The latest, at the time of writing, is the arrival of a great Handley Page at Karachi, in India, from England. It is possible by the time these lines are in print that the world will ring with the arrival of the huge plane now winging her way from Cairo, across the vast forests of the Dark Continent, to Cape Town. Within a few months we shall certainly hear of the first crossing of the Atlantic by air.

It is interesting to look back at some records of the past—the very near past—and recall some of the achievements of the earlier aviators. Apart from the experiments of the Wrights and of Farman, the first really great achievement was the crossing of the Channel by LeBlot, in July, 1908. Early on the morning of the 25th he left Calais, and after a flight of forty-three minutes at a height of no more than 300 feet, he landed at Dover, having covered a distance of thirty-one miles at forty miles an hour.

In 189 came the circuit of England won by Lieut. Conneau, with Vedrine second. The winner received £10,000 Daily Mail prize, while £2,000 was subscribed for Vedrine.

Gleam Risks.

Conneau, too, was the first man to cross France in an aeroplane. In June, 1911, he flew from Paris to Avignon, in heavy gusts above the Rhone, he had a fearful struggle, and barely escaped disaster.

It was in a continuation of the same great flight that Conneau flew on to Rome, and so, for the first time, covered the 816 miles between the French and Italian capitals.

In that race Roland Garros was defeated by Conneau, but two years later, in 1913, Garros achieved a world's record by being the first to fly from Europe to Africa. Leaving St. Raphael, near Cannes, he landed at Bizerta, in Africa, having covered 500 miles in less than eight hours.

In 1913 Vedrine was again to the fore, and flew across Germany from Nancy in France, to Prague in Bohemia, without a stop. It was a risky game, for even then, a year before the war, the Huns had flatly forbidden any French aviator to cross their sacred soil.

A Hundred Years of Collar.

This year is the centenary of the collar, considered as a separate and distinct article of wearing apparel.

Up till 1819 collars were made all in one piece with the shirts to which they belonged. In that year the wife of a blacksmith living in Troy, in the state of New York, grew tired of too frequently washing her husband's shirts, due to the fact that the collar "showed the dirt" so quickly, and she hit upon the expedient of making a set of detachable collars.

The idea was seized upon by a male resident in Troy, a man named Ebenezer Brown, who thought he saw money in it. It was not, however, until ten years later, in 1829, that he started in business as the first manufacturer of detachable collars. His wife and daughter made the collars, which were of the stand-up kind, and were fastened round the neck with strings. Brown peddled them about.

It will probably be news to many people to learn that it takes about three yards of material to make a dozen of average modern collars. Also, contrary to most people's belief, linen is little used for making the best grades. They are manufactured of more exclusively from a special kind of cotton known as Sea Island cotton.

The Congregational Pulpit.

On Sunday night the Rev. D. B. Ashford delivered the third of the series of sermons on Personal Problems, No. 3, being "The Ordeal of Temptation." In spite of the inclement weather there was a large congregation and they listened with rapt attention to what was one of the best discourses which the new pastor at Queen's Road has given since his coming. He took as his text, James 1. 12: "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation."

Temptation, said the preacher, is a universal experience, as common to the saint as to the sinner, as real to the person as to the man in the pew. It is unavoidable and inescapable, whether we flee to the deserts of Egypt like the Theban monks or live on the top of a high pillar as did Simon Stylites. The possibility of Temptation arises from the fact that we live in a moral world, in which man is a free agent, able to choose between the evil and the good. Without that power man would be a mere machine and there could be no such thing as moral character. It is important to grasp the fact that Temptation is not an evil but a good. As the Apostle James says, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation." To suffer temptation is not to sin. Jesus was tempted, yet without sin. We should think of it not as a solicitation downward, but as God's call upward, and our manhood's opportunity; not our stumbling block, but as a stepping stone towards higher things. Temptation is part of God's machinery for turning out character. It may be described as the struggle between the alternatives of good and evil which goes on in a moral being. In every moral crisis we have to make our choice between the higher and the lower. Each presents its claims and makes its appeal, and we have to decide which shall have our adherence. Temptation comes upon us in various ways. Sometimes it comes down upon us like an Australian flood, sweeping all before it. At other times it attacks us from ambush. There are other forms of evil which dog our steps at every turn, as a "black fellow" will track a kangaroo for days until at last he fires him out and then appears him to death. We cannot afford to play with sin. The fight for character is not a sham fight but a real conflict, and the result means either triumph or tragedy. Therefore we must set our faces against every dangerous fascination that would cause us to fall. There is nothing in life that we can afford to do wrong for. Many people do wrong for the sake of pleasure, pride, ambition or the love of dollars. But it is our duty to suffer rather than to sin. Better to fail in business as an honest man, than to make a fortune by dishonest means. We must never give in to evil. Sometimes we shall be defeated, but we must never acknowledge such defeat as final. We must never sign an armistice with evil. Just as the British army in June 1918, though roughly handled by the Germans, pushed back for miles and their line almost broken, yet refused to give in, so we must fight on. And we are not alone in the struggle. As the battered battalions of the first British Expeditionary Force, in their retreat from Mons, beheld the "Comrade in White" in their midst, so the "Christ in White" in our temptations, to succour and to aid. Next Sunday night Mr. Ashford will speak on the subject of "Resolve and its Achievement," this being the fourth of the series of sermons on Personal Problems.—Com.
