The appearance of Mr. T. G. Mitchelmaster organist, but on Friday evening he excelled himself. Every number was excellent, but if any might be nentioned as particularly fine and inspiring we would say that Mendels-sohn's Andante from A Minor, Concerto, and the Funeral March, C Minor, Beethoven, were among his best. His responses included the Bonnie, Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond and a Scotch medley, including an imitation of the bagpipes that was very fine. His plano numbers were splendid, and included a simple rendition of the simple but beautiful Cradle Song and the Waltz Romantic, both the artist's own compositions. Other numbers included such authors as Liszt. Schubert-Liszt, Back, Schumann and Mendelssohn. His organ composition, Andante Re-

The first number on the programme was a discussion on primary reading, which was led by Misses Murdoch and McMillan in two good papers. dealt with the relative merits of the readers now in use and showed originality and carefulness. Quite a number took part in the discussion, and there was a unanimity of opinion that the reader published by Morang & Co. was preferable for primary purposes.

At this point Prof. Dearness, of the Normal School took occasion to exoress his pleasure at meeting so many of the teachers, who had come from the school. He also remarked that this was a new era in Canadian education. It was once thought that all he pupil had was a head to be filled. Now, the idea was to develop the power to use the knowledge the head, It was not now a mere contained. spiring sacred music. The anthem, filling of the memory. Prof. Lochead gave a much-appreciated paper on nature study, which he interspersed with a number of incidents. In opening, he said, that 3 per cent of the pupils had a curriculum which suited them from primary work to the university. The better plan was to have a curriculum that would suit for each class of pupils. Talking about nature study in Canada, was, he said, like carrying coal to Newcastle. In London the people were fortunate in having the opportunities to study nature. The city was renowned for illustrious naturalists, such or Dr. Bethune, W. E. Saunders and Prof. Dearness. The difficulty was to show direct results. A foundation was to be laid, and where better could we get it than through our senses from our surroundings. Economic benefits were derived from nature study by studying the insect phases of nature. We were able to combat with such grubs as the peaweevil, which gave the study an intrinsic as well as an intellectual value. The best plan in studying was to secure a little knowledge of everything. A vote of thanks was tendered the peaker by Messrs. Grant and Mc-Gregor.

Mr. Pickles, of the Normal School, gave a talk on manual training, which was interesting. He said that in making the models the hand and eye were given great training, which was of more benefit than the making of them.

Rhubarb in sufficient established his reputation here as a quantities to sour the disposition of the people of the entire city of London, or in lieu of this to create a corner in the sugar market. In fact, on London market today but one commodity was visible to the naked eye, and that was rhubarb. During the past week the appetizing backbone of sauces and pies sold for from 80 cents to 90 cents per dozen bunches, and this high price induced all sorts and all classes of persons to flock to the city with rhubarb today. And with the usual result. Before 10 o'clock rhubarb could be bought for 5 cents per bunch, or from 40 cents to 50 cents per dozen. And at that hour the loads of red, topped off with a healthy green, remained almost intact. There were no purchasers. It was a case of too much rhubarb.

There were a few shrubs and trees offered, the former at 15 cents to 20 cents each, and the latter at 50 cents for choice hard and soft maples. The demand appeared to be very slow, however, and it would appear that the Civic Improvement Society's efforts to have the people of London beautify their places by planting trees and shrubs have not as yet borne the desired fruit. At all events the men with the trees said business was very bad, if you need it. and had been bad all along.
