No new features are noticeable in the otton trade. Business in spot cotton at Liverpeol and elsewhere has been exceedingly small. The Lancashire mills hope, with short time, to bridge over six weeks or more of scarcity. The cotton, woolen and worsted industries had a somewhat more encouraging week in raw material, but only small domestic produce was hindered by high prices. The manufacturing centers have done a fair business, and the iron and steel trades in the main rather better. More business is mentioned in pig iron and foreign competition is much less in evidence than

There are several clubs which exist in London for no other reason than that their members are all persecuted by blackmailers, and have thus united for some measure of protection. Of such a character was the Society of Reformers, the existence of which was brought to light in 1898 by the suicide of one of its members. On investigation is was found that this unfortunate was only one of fourteen who in their desperation had killed themselves in the preceding twelve months.
