

FOR THE POST. EVICTED.

Down by the hillside the humble thatched dwelling,
Needled in place, tho' a lone barren spot,

When thronged with the past of a sorrowful lot;
The feid by the roadside, scant harvest had yielded.

Over the meadows strange forms are moving,
Ah now, they are crowding the shaly green lane,

And the swaggar and shout of the dreaded evictor.

There are among Protestants two classes of writers, who differ vastly in their views and statements respecting the cause of the Catholic Church.

There are among Protestants two classes of writers, who differ vastly in their views and statements respecting the cause of the Catholic Church, and the distinguishing characteristics to point out on which side the spirit of truth pre-vails.

There is another class of Protestants, however, whose candor and learning form an honorable and contrast with the whom we have just described.

It is difficult to conceive how men, who take this view of the subject, can remain long in the bosom of Protestantism, when they look for it in vain among the evidences of primitive Christianity or among those glorious works which it was the manifest destiny of the Church to accomplish.

We are to be likened unto the heathen and the publican. Many more will follow as have followed their example, and when we can read in days gone by in the Mercator Review such sentiments as the following from Professor Schaff, a man who for learning and profound attainments enjoys the admiration of the civilized world, we cannot but indulge the thought that he one day will be added to the number.
