

A host of more wide-ranging and longer-term suggestions for CBMs have also been advanced and were again summarized by Child. These deal with training and education, the role of the super-powers, expanding the role of CBMs and many other initiatives. The above list is only partial and its components would not necessarily require significant or, in some cases, any verification mechanism. However, it should be clear from the list that even the extensive verification regime required for the accords so far discussed could be expanded dramatically in response to a greater degree of interest in the spreading of confidence-building measures.