

Canadians planning to travel abroad will likely require a valid passport or a travel document to enter a foreign country. When they do, they can rely on the services of one of the federal government's most accessible agencies – the Passport Office. The service the Office most commonly performs is issuing regular passports, but it also meets the needs of its clients by producing diplomatic, special and emergency passports, certificates of identity and refugee travel documents.