

The Code of Conduct for Canadian companies operating in South Africa has been at a strength and including them to test black workers. Many companies have voluntarily withdrawn - that is, stopped operations in South Africa. Sanctions have also limited both individual and of the South African government. With South Africa's withdrawal from the voluntary ban on the production of foreign arms, it is clear that no foreign arms will be sold to South Africa. Official contacts are monitored and restricted and Canada has withdrawn accreditation to Canada of the South African embassy in Washington.

The withdrawal of Canadian arms and military equipment from South Africa is a significant step. It is a clear signal to the South African government that Canada is serious about ending apartheid. The withdrawal of arms and military equipment is a necessary condition for the resumption of trade relations between Canada and South Africa.

Restrictions on trade relations with South Africa are necessary to support the anti-apartheid struggle. It is essential that Canada continue to exert pressure on the South African government to end apartheid.

Over a year ago, the Canadian government announced that it would withdraw its arms and military equipment from South Africa. This was a significant step towards ending apartheid. The withdrawal of arms and military equipment is a necessary condition for the resumption of trade relations between Canada and South Africa.

It is just a government matter, or do you think that Canada has a part to play? The government has taken strong action against apartheid and the reaction of the government of Canada. As a result, they are in a position to help other organizations. The Canadian government will continue to support the anti-apartheid struggle in South Africa. The House of Commons has passed a resolution that calls for the withdrawal of Canadian arms and military equipment from South Africa. This resolution is a clear signal to the South African government that Canada is serious about ending apartheid.

This is how Canada put pressure on South Africa

In addition to seeking dialogue for dialogue and ending apartheid and providing assistance to the victims of apartheid, Canada has also taken other steps to put pressure on the South African government.

Canada has been a leading force in the international community to end apartheid. It has led the way in the withdrawal of arms and military equipment from South Africa. It has also led the way in the withdrawal of Canadian gold from South Africa. On the export side, there are also Canadian sales of military equipment to the South African government or its agencies, and on sales of oil and refined products. In addition, Canadians exporting to South Africa cannot get Export Development Corporation financing or benefit from the federal program for Export Market Development.

The federal government is also withdrawing its own arms and military equipment from South Africa. It is also withdrawing its own arms and military equipment from South Africa. There is also a ban on new arms and military equipment from South Africa. Canada banks do not make loans to and Canada has prohibited the agreement to end to the end double taxation.