es will lay

t of many
he rescuer
ing a ring
more than
; and then
her with

eaven as if her dark from their reserved at; but there tows, could linar, who or the pury mounted the young raising her to the uniprompted w rose and ad crossing m.

le to Major by the ac-Colonel de ught to his y falsehood I his apartd for some restoration which were ed children, service was to excellent against the arcely had f the ritual mpart, and ends; and, place, tears while many

notice was signs as if in demand for a parley. The officers, headed by Major Blackwater, now become the commandant of the place, immediately ascended the rampart, when the stranger was at once recognized by Captain de Haldimar for the young Ottawa, the preserver of his life, and the avenger of the deaths of those they mourned, in whose girdle was thrust, in seeming pride, the richly mounted dagger that officer had caused to be conveyed to him through his no less generous sister. A long conference ensued, in the language of the Ottowas, between the parties just named, the purport of which was of high moment to the garrison, now nearly reduced to the last extremity. The young is ief had come to apprise them, that, won by the noble conduct of the English, on a late occasion, when his warriors were wholly in their power Panteac had expressed a generous determination to conclude a peace with the garrison, and henceforth to consider them as his friends. This he had publicly declared in a large council of the chiefs, held the preceding night; and the motive of the Ottawa's coming was to assure the English, that, on this occasion, their great leader was perfectly sincere in a resolution, at which he had the more readily arrived, now that his terrible coadjutor and vindictive adviser was no more. He prepared them for the coming of Ponteac and the principal chiefs of the league to demand a council on the morrow; and, with this final communication, again withdrew.

The Ottawa was right. Within a week from that period the English were to be seen once more issuing from their fort; and, although many months elapsed before the wounds of their suffering hearts were healed, still were they grateful to Providence for their final preservation from a doom that had fallen, without exception, on every fortress on the line of frontier in which they lay