MORE LIBERAL INCONSISTENCY.

The Globe is laid down a most curious diary proposition in regard to Canada's right to influence public opinion in Great Britain. Canada is vitally interested in extending her trade with Great Britain. Even if we were politically independent of Great Britain we would be justified in doing our best to increase our trade with that country. But as part of the same Empire we surely have a right to expect that the trade relations between the two countries should be as friendly as possible. The Globe is not less interested in Canada itself. The Globe accepts these propositions as correct, but in the practical application of them it loses its head. Our contemporary lays down the proposition that this country has no business in making any proposition to the Mother Country looking towards the establishment of closer trade relations between the two countries. The idea of Canada sending a commission to Great Britain to discuss a reciprocity treaty is treated by the Globe as a ridiculous proposal. The Globe is not less interested in Canada itself.
