Byrnes, a representative of the presbytery, or by Rev. W. Brown, a representative of the Methodist Church. The plan is laid before them and discussion invited, and if they are ready a vote is taken. It is stated that so far out of 24 congregations with whom the matter has been discussed only two have turned it down. It is pointed out that the local church to be formed is a co-operation or community church, in which members do not lose their denomination affiliations, and other things being equal, the church building of the denomination giving up its minister, is to be used for public worship. Title deeds of church property are not affected, and in every way as little change as possible is made in the existing organization.
