and proceed further in accordance with this opinion." The New Judgment. The opinion begins with a brief statement of the manner in which the case was brought from the district court to the court of appeals. Section 6 of the Interstate Commerce Act, re-lating to the publishing and filing of rates, is quoted and the opinion con-tinues:

"There are 169 assignments of error, taking up 67 pages of printed record. In view of the conclusion, however, to which we have come it's unnecessary to review many of these assignments --the ones reviewed covering all the propositions of law that we deem es-sential to the guidance of the district court in the event of a second trial." The opinion quotes Judge Landis' charge to the jury, in which the dis-trict judge declared that to show that the defendant accepted a concession knowingly was not necessary to estab-lish that the defendant had actual knowledge of the lawful rate. On this phase of the case the opinion of the court of appeals declares:

Bold Outbreak. Driven from their hiding place by hunger, and fearing that they would be surrounded by the police, the two men appeared on Charles-street in Ja-maica Plains at about dusk and pro-ceeded to "shoot up" the town. They looked like foreigners and were roughly dressed. Some citizens who had been assisting in the hunt for robbers saw the men and tried to intercept them, whereupon the two started to run and with the general business of the coun-try, and he also opines that the different railway companies are in the same position as the banks. "And here in Quebec I recall with much pleasure the no uncertain proofs which I have received on my several visits to Canada of the loyalty of the King's French-Canadian subjects.

"Their proved fidelity in times of difficulty and danger, happily long past, is one of the greatest tributes to the political generosity of England's rule, and the knowledge that they and their fellow-Canadians of British origin are working hand in hand in the upbuilding of the Dominion, is a source of deep satisfaction to the King, as well as to all those who take part in British institutions.

"I cordially agree with you in the propriety of calling apart, as a memorial for present and future generations, the battlegrounds of the Plains of Abraham, hallowed by the association of past years. and I heartily congratulate all concerned in this noble undertaking upon the success which has attended their patriotic efforts.

All the not-ables on the wharf cheered like school-boys as the royal banner was un-shipped and the prince mounted the gangway. He decided at once to in-spect his regiment (the 43rd Ottawa), and marched up and flown the ranks before proceeding to the pavilion. He was dressed according to his rank as rear-admiral, and wore the broad blue ribbon of the Garter, besides many other orders. His beard was closely cropped, and his blue eyes shone bluer than usually, as if the Atlantic had imbued them with color. He listened most attentively to the address read by Sir Wilfrid in Eng-sish and then in French, and, reply.
