THE NEW GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

It cannot be said that the comments of the English papers on the appointment of Lord Grey are very enlightening.

The News says that he is a jingo Chamberlain and mischief-maker, while the Times cheers up and remarks that he will maintain cordial relations with the United States, "while at the same time he will know how to treat those turbulent demonstrations of separatist spirits which now and then in a few obscure quarters claim certain notice."

We are not much worried by these separatist spirits, but if they should become turbulent, what is Lord Grey going to do with them? He cannot banish them or put them in jail, and we can only suppose that the Times is darkly alluding to the possibility of their receiving invitations for festivities at Rideau Hall.

Without cherishing any extravagant hopes or fears about the new governor-general, we may assume that he is a solid, level-headed man who will be in mind the lines of his powers, and within those limits endeavor to promote the welfare of the country. The influence to be wielded by a governor-general in this country is not to be ascertained solely by a study of writers on the constitution. It is a moral rather than a legal power. If he possesses political wisdom and experience, those qualities will show themselves in his intercourse with his ministers; he will work most usefully by working along the lines of least resistance.

IT IS THE COMPANY'S BUSINESS.

If a private individual had killed two children in a little more than a week, with his horse, or his bicycle, or his motor car, he would be prosecuted for manslaughter at least, and would not be allowed to take refuge in speculations as to whether he had procured the best possible brake or bit. The law would simply say: "You must manage your horse or your bicycle or your automobile in such a manner as not to kill innocent people. How that is to be accomplished is your own business. If you cannot find the proper device for checking your horse or your machine, you must moderate your speed."

Exactly the same reasoning applies to the Toronto Street Railway Company. If the company cannot find an effective device, it must moderate the speed of its cars. It is under no obligation to run at any particular rate of speed, and the average citizen is much more interested in having frequent cars, with plenty of accommodation, than cars run at such a rate of speed that they cannot be easily checked.

But the great point is not to allow the company to shift from its own shoulders the responsibility for the care of human life on its lines. If an effective fender can be obtained, at whatever cost, it must be obtained. If not, the speed of the cars must be reduced, so that the company must be allowed to say: "We intend to run our cars at a certain speed, and the people must look out for themselves." The company must so conduct its business that it will be reasonably safe for children to cross the tracks; if as well as the company has to spend more money, or to moderate the speed of its cars, that is a matter of small importance compared with human lives.

CURIOSITIES OF TIBET.

Lieut.-Col. Waddell, author of "The Buddhism of Tibet," contributes to the London Times an interesting chapter on the history. The Tibetans, he says, were once a very warlike people under kings and chiefs chosen for strength and valor. Each year they sent their "little oath" to their chiefs, and sacrificed sheep, dogs and monkeys. Every third year they took the great oath, and sacrificed men, oxen, horses and asses. They owed no allegiance to China, and in fact in the seventh century they overran Western China, and forced the Chinese to pay tribute. As a part of the terms of peace the King of Tibet married a daughter of the Emperor of China. She was a devout Buddhist, and introduced that religion into Tibet. The writer is evidently prejudiced against Tibet, and is influenced by the unfriendly relations between that country and Great Britain. He says that Buddhism had an evil influence over the country, and degenerated into a worship. The lamas multiplied their number, and finally assumed the position of themselves. The lamas were kept in ignorant servitude, and the nation declined. The first priest, king or grand lama of Tibet was the high priest of the red-cap lamas at Sakya. He was raised to the kingship by Kublai Khan. In searching about for a religion for the more uncivilized portions of his great empire, he called the lamas together and finally fixed upon lamaism. The present lama is under thirty years of age. A few years ago, profiting by the loss of prestige suffered by

CLOSE CONTESTS IN RING JUDGES MAKE PROGRESS

Several Fine Classes on Exhibit—Judging Starts in Both Rings To Day.

Prizes were given in several more classes at the Exhibition horse ring on Friday. The competitions were close, and the judges required considerable time to reach a decision in some of the classes. There was no race on, but there was a road drivers' parade for pacers. This was won by J. W. Pringle's Planet from Strathroy. Miss K. L. Wilks captured both first and second in pair of matched horses, geldings or mares, standard breeds. One thing noticeable as far regarding the judging is the large number of out-of-town exhibitors who take prizes. Jas. Morton, coachman for Mr. George Gooderham, was again awarded first place for best professional coachman. His performance was very creditable. The first prize in the Gordon Highlanders' trophy went to Earl Earl took first in the middleweight green hunters' class, beating out Mr. Pepper's horses. The first prize in the single harness, over 12 hands up to 13 hands 1 inch—G. H. Gooderham, Toronto, Lady Constance, 2nd prize, 12 hands 1 inch—D. V. Varden, 2nd Mrs. E. Mead, Norway, Dolly, 3rd.

The above is from the Hamilton Spectator of Thursday. Our answer to it is that John A. Platt, president of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, has given out the following statement, gave out an interview on the same day of the Spectator's article, commending the World's declaration in favor of the election of labor representatives to the Canadian parliament. "I think," said Mr. Platt, "it is important to say that the labor party in this country were watching with interest Mr. Maclean's course in parliament. More significant was his next statement, that the Conservative party at Ottawa did not seem to endorse Mr. Maclean's position. They speak of the Hamilton Spectator. It disowns and discredits the principle of public ownership and says labor is hankering for that sort of a mix-up. Mr. James Brown, for the Trades and Labor Congress endorsed all that Mr. Platt said, and a great deal more. He was in favor of a strictly independent labor party, with labor representatives in parliament. James Wilson of the Toiler said that labor included public ownership in its platform, and he commended the proposal of the World. He said the labor party was dissatisfied with both parties. On Thursday night the legislative committee of the Toronto District Trades Council presented their report on the subject. They speak of all for organized labor in Toronto, declared as follows:

As regards the action of the Toronto members of parliament, our committee believe that this council looks upon government ownership as one of the most important of modern reforms in the interests of labor, and that Mr. Maclean's action in seeking to strengthen government control over corporations operating public utilities was a step in the right direction, and we recommend that a letter be sent to both houses of parliament at Toronto, expressing our deep regret that they failed to give their hearty approval and vote to Mr. Maclean's motion. Mr. Maclean, M. P. for East York.

The Spectator is free to continue to call public ownership "a mix-up," and to be unduly influenced by the statements by it in fair and unfair circumstances. We do not think that David McCulloch, were he to return to the chair of the Spectator, would act in the same way; we imagine that Mr. McCulloch was of the opinion that the best method of settling the matter was to have Mr. Maclean elected as the labor representative of Hamilton, nearly thirty years ago. Sir John Macdonald appreciated the action of Hamilton labor at that occasion.

And lastly, in this matter, we prefer to take the opinion of Hamilton labor on this question, as it may declare itself in the near future, rather than from the Southams, Limited, a concern that seems to think that the chief aim of a newspaper proprietor is to get as many shares as possible in the public franchise-holding company, which may be going, and in doing all the job printing he can possibly get from this same kind of corporations. The Spectator is at least outspoken in its attitude toward labor representation in parliament and on public ownership, and equally strenuous in letting the corporations know that it can be relied on as long as the job printing and the shares are going. Hon. J. M. Gibson, attorney-general of the Ross government, and head trustee of the Cataract Power Co., was always able to rely on the Spectator.
