SCOTTISH CHARACTER SKETCHES.

By DAVID LYALL. 75 Cents.

"David Lyall shares with Ian Maclaren the gift of investing Scottish character, its life and manners, with the charms as well as the truthfulness of reality illumined by the glow of feeling, and made human by the ARTLESS-NESS of the story-telling."—Introduction.

Periodicals.

In the October Harper's an engraved portrait of "The Author of 'The Martian'" stands as frontispiece, and a generous instalment of Mr. Du Maurier's new novel, with five characteristic drawings by the author are given. Other features of the number are: An illustrated paper entitled "The Blue Quail of the Cactus," by Frederic Remington; "The Hypnotist," a story by Octave Thanet, with four illustrations by A. B. Frost; "Electricity," with twenty-four illustrations; "Some American Crickets," by Samuel H. Scudder, with nine illustrations by L. J. Bridgman; etc. As usual in this ever popular magazine, the illustrations are excellent as well as numerous.

The Atlantic Monthly for October is one of the most important issues of the year. There is the usually fine literary flavour to the contents, and this is supplemented by timely papers on political, scientific, and historical subjects; but the feature which will attract the widest attention is an innovation. A new department is opened having the attractive title, "Men and Letters," to which the best writers will contribute short signed articles on literary subjects, reminiscences, suggestions, criticisms and the like. The department is opened this month by W. D. Howells with a paper reminiscent of his days as editor of the Atlantic. He is followed by John G. Burroughs on "The Poet and the Modern," and W. P. Trent, on reading the 50th volume of Balzac.

The October Arena is devoted largely to the silver question on which it has all along taken a pronounced position in favour of the white metal; but there are a number of articles on other important, if less engrossing subjects. One of these, of peculiar interest to Canadians, is "How Prince Edward Island Settled its Land Question," by J. H. Hastam. Wm. Howe Tolman, Ph.D., writes on "Municipal Reform;" Sophia McClelland on "The Question of Genius," and John F. Clark on "Soul Evolution." An article that will surely attract attention is entitled "Are Our Christian Missionaries in India Frauds?" by Rev. J. H. Mueller. There is a sketch entitled "Three Travellers," and a liberal instalment of the serial "Between Two Worlds."

"The Present Situation of Sunday Opening," according to Mr. Frederic Peake, who writes under this caption in the September number of The Westminster Review, is not such a success as was at first believed. Mr. Peake concludes his able paper with the following remarks: "The perusal of the additional papers in the June and July number of the Westminster Review, after making considerable allowance for the intoxication of a momentary success, should suffice to convince thoughtful observers of modern tendencies among all classes, that it is not only the religious observance of the Lord's day which is at stake, but the preservation of the mental and physical repose of that true Sabbath, which is becoming more and more a necessity for the overstrained faculties of present-day workers. It may be permitted, perhaps, to one among the crowd to suggest that a recognition of the religious sanction of the day can alone preserve it from the craving after pleasure and the greed of gain; and that a careful religious use of the day can alone secure from it that fulness of rest which it was meant to bestow." Other notable papers in the issue are: "The Foreigner," by C. D. Farquharson; a powerful, though brief article entitled "A Survey of Events;" "A Last Reminiscence of Sir Joseph Farnby," a graceful essay by Emily S. Judge; "The Ethics of Statecraft," by Horace Seal; "German and English Interests in Samoa," by J. F. Rose Soley; "Imperative Free Trade," by Robert Ewen; "Latter-day Conservatism in Scotland," by W. M. Ramsay; "Dante Gabriel Rossetti," by E. G. Wheelwright; "The Economics of Rating," by George Croser; "Should Canvassing at Parliamentary Elections be Abolished?" by Lewis Emery; "Mosquitoes and their Enemies," a manual; "Mosquitoes and a brief reply to the recent attacks made against Pitman's short-hand by a Mr. Johnstone and others, which attacks are clearly refuted by Isaac Pitman & Sons.
