distance; nevertheless, I entered well, and held on by some dead fern-stems, and did not let go until I was within of this history. For, hearing a noise in front of me, like a coward not knowing where, but afraid to turn round or think of it, I felt myself going down some deep passage into a pit of darkness. It was no good to catch the sides, the whole thing seemed to go with me.
Then, without knowing how, I was leaning over a night of water.

This water was black radiance, as are certain diamonds, spumed across with vaults of rock, and carrying no image, neither showing marble nor end, but centered (as it might be) with a bottomless indrawn smile.

With that chill and dread upon me, and the sheer rock all around, and the faint light heaving wavy on the silence of this gulf, I must have lost my wits and gone to the bottom, if there were any.

But suddenly a robin sang (as they will do after dark, toward spring) in the brown fern and ivy behind me. I took it for my little Annie's voice (for she could call any robin), and gathering quick warm comfort, sprang up the steep way toward the starlight. Climbing back, as the stones glided down, I heard the cold greedy wave gapping like a blind black dog, into the distance of arches and hollow depths of darkness.

CHAPTER IX

THERE IS NO PLACE LIKE HOME

I can assure you, and tell no lie (as John Fry always used to say, when telling his very largest), that I scrambled back to the mouth of that pit as if the evil one had been after me. And sorely I repeated now of all my boyish folly, or madness it might well be termed, in my shorts, from dinner-time often until the gray dusk, while he all the time should have been at work spring-plowing upon the farm. And, for that matter, I never got in again, without being cast in by neck and by crop, I will give our new-born donkey leave to set up for my school-master.

How I kept that resolution we shall see hereafter. It is enough for me now to tell you I escaped from the den that night. First I sat down in the little opening which Lorna had pointed out to me, and wondered whether she had meant, as I bitterly occurred to me, that I should run down into the pit, and be drowned, and give no more trouble. But in less than half a minute I had changed that idea, and remembered how she was vexed to think that even a loach should lose his life. And then I said to myself, "Now surely she would value me more than a thousand loaches; and what she said must be quite true about the way out of this horrible place."

Therefore I began to search with the utmost care and diligence, and all my teeth were chattering, and all my ears were beginning to ache with the chillness and the wetness. Before very long the moon appeared over the edge of the mountain, and among the trees at the top of it, and then I espied rough steps, and rocky, made as if with a sledge hammer, narrow, steep and far asunder, soaped here and there in the side of the cliff, and then, on the left, a bulging cliff, like the marks upon a great brown loaf, where a hungry child has picked at it. And higher up, where the light of the moon shone broader upon the pines, there seemed to be a rude broken track, like the shadow of a crooked stick thrown upon a house-wall.

It is wonderful how time runs away, when all these things are going on, and others come in to load him down the hill and prevent him from stopping to look about. And for my part can never comceive how people who live in small towns and cities, and who never leave home except in a coach or in a motor car, nor even so much as a stick to cut or a stile to climb and sit down on, can live without being utterly weary of them, and dying from pure indolence, is a thing God only knows. If His mercy allows Him to think of it.

How the year went by I know not, only that I was abroad all day, shooting, or fishing, or minding the farm, or riding after some stray beast, or away by the sea-side below Glenhorze, wondering at the great waters, and resolving to go for a sailor. For in those days I had a firm belief, as many other strong boys have, of being born for a sea career. And indeed I had been in a boat nearly twice; and the second time mother found it out, and came and drew me back again; and after that she cried so badly, that I was never allowed to go to her to go no more without telling her.

But Betty Muxworthy spoke her mind quite in a different way about it, the while she was wringing my hose, and saying, "Zalor, ces fai as zarve un raight. He can't kape out of the water here, whur a muck go vor to vaine him, zame as a gurt toad sunnuping, and very saight of his braiches. How will un ever baide aboard zhip, wif the watter zinging out under un, and comin' in splash when the wind blow. Latt un go, missus, latt un go, zay I for van, and old Davy wash his elouts for un."

And this discourse of Betty's tended more to keep me from going. For I hated Betty in those days, and children always have a cross servant, and often get fond of a false one. But Betty, like many only, thinking it just for the moment perhaps, and rushing away with a bucket; ready to stick to it, like a clenching nail, or beaten the wrong way with your left hand, but melting over it, if you left her, as stinging soap, left alone in a basin, spreads all abroad without boiling.

For all this is beyond the children, and beyond me too for that matter, even now in ripe experience; for I never did know what women mean, and never shall except when they tell me, if that shall be my power. Now let that question pass. For although I am now in a place of some authority, I have observed that no one ever listens to me when I am talking to lay down the law, but all waiting with open ears until I do enforce it. And methinks he who reads a history cares not much for the wisdom or folly of the writer, knowing well that the former is far less than his own, and man would say. I looked through the door from the dark by the wood-stack, and was half of a minute to stay out like a dog, for fear of the rating and reckoning; but the way my dear mother was looking about, and the browning of the margins, got the better of me, and I went in. But nobody could get out of me where I had been all the day and evening; although they worried me never so much, and longed to shake me to pieces, especially Betty Muxworthy, who never could learn to let well alone. Not that they made me tell any lies, although it would have served them right almost for intruding on other people's business; but that I just held my tongue, and ate my supper rarely, and let them try their taunts and jibes, and drove them almost wild, after supper, by smiling exceedingly knowingly. And, indeed, I could have told them things, as I hinted once or twice; and then poor Betty and our little Lizzie were so mad with eagerness, that between them I went into the fire, being thoroughly overcome with laughter and my own impudence.

Now what the working of my mind was (if, indeed, it worked at all, and did not rather go to sleep, for my nature is in my power to say; only that the result of my adventure in the Doonee Glen was to make me dream a good deal of nights,
