Make Home Happy.

Though we may not change the cottage
For a mansion tall and grand,
Or exchange the little grass plot
For a boundless stretch of land—
Yet there's something brighter, dearer,
Than the wealth we thus command.

Though we have not the means to purchase Costly pictures, rich and rare—
Though we have not silken hangings
For the walls so bleak and bare,
We can hang them o'er with garlands
For the flowers are everywhere.

We can always make home cheerful,
If the right course we begin,
We can make it inmates happy,
And their truest blessing win,
It will make the small room brighter
If we let the sunshine in.

We can gather round the fireside
When the evening hours are long,
We can blend our hearts and voices
In a happy social song;
We can guide some erring brother,
Lead him from the path of wrong.

We may fill our home with music,
And with sunshine brimming o'er,
If against all dark intruders,
We will firmly close the door—
Yet should some evil shadows enter,
We must love each other more.

There are treasures for the lowly
Which the grandest fail to find,
There's a chain of sweet affection
Binding friends of kindred mind;
We may reap the choicest blessings,
From the poorest lot assigned.

"SHIP AHoy!"

A Story in thirty-six Cable Lengths.

Mr. Tudge, Miss.
Show him in, Samuel," said May.
There was a great deal of shoe-rubbing on the mat outside, and then entered Mr. Tudge, very spruce, his hair curled—he had spent an hour at a hair-dresser's on his way; his tail-coat, of peculiar cut, buttoned very tightly across his chest; and a general air about him, largely increased by his carrying an immense bouquet in his hand.

"How are you Mr. Tudge?" said May, advancing, with a sad smile, to shake hands.

"Like a man coming into sunshine," my darling," said Tudge, taking her hand and kissing it. "Ah, my dear, once upon a time, when you were little, it used to be your hand."
And it need not now, dear Mr.
Tudge," said May, offering her cheek to the old man, who kissed it fondly, and then sat down on the couch beside her, retaining her hand, and, after laying down the bouquet carefully by his side, patting and stroking it tenderly.

"Bless you, my dear," he said, with tears in his eyes—"God bless you!
And you grown such a beautiful young woman, too. But I always said you would; didn't I now, my dear—didn't I always say you would?"
You always spoiled me, Mr.
Tudge," said May, laughing.

"Not I," said Tudge, stoutly. "But May, my dear, what fashions we used to have. Don't you remember the cheese-cakes, the almond rock, and the plums."
