"Come on!" echoed Trale; then he stopped and caught Neville's arm.
"Mr. Neville!" he said, under his breath, and in a tone of reluctance and disappointment.
"Well?"
"It's—it's not only him, sir, but—but—there's Sir Jordan, your brother!"
Neville stopped dead short. He had been so much engrossed by his burning, desire to seize Lavarick, so much absorbed in the remembrance of the harm the man had attempted to do Sylvia, that Neville had forgotten his brother and his part in the mysterious business under the treees.

BRAKESMAN KILLED.

Tweed, Ont., Oct. 9.—An accident occurred here about 8 o'clock last night on the Ontario Powder Works Railway siding, in which Alex. Ferguson, of Perth, brakesman on the C. P. R., lost his life. Two cars left the track, throwing Ferguson under them.

ARE YOU WEAK

You are discouraged.

Whichever man it was, he turned upon him with a furious energy, and Neville knew that it was a struggle to the death. He set his teeth hard, and locked the man with one arm while he felt for his throat with the other.

But his opponent seemed to understand his object, and, gripping him tightly, bore all his weight upon him, and so they wrestled to and fro, linked in a hideous embrace.

Neither spoke—each seemed to tacitly acknowledge that while life lasted the fight must hold.

Neville was surprised by the strength which was put out to meet his, but he attributed it to the frenzy of the rage and despair which must be burning in both Jordan's and Lavarick's breasts. For a moment he did not know which of the villains he had got hold of; but presently he felt a beard touch his cheek, and his heart throbbed, as he was convinced it was Lavarick.

"Now!' he thought, with a joy that no

vinced it was Lavarick.
"Now!' he thought, with a joy that no words can express, "now is the hour of reckoning."

He thought of Sylvia—of the last time he had seen the wretch with Sylvia in his grasp—and in his veins ran the hot, fierce desire to crush the life out of the

To and fro they swayed, the grip of each growing more intense, more intolerable each moment. At last, just when Neville, with an awful sense of disappointment and balked vengeance, was feeling faint, he managed to get his leg under his opponent's and with a crash the lawer came to the ground, Neville falling on top of, and still gripping him. "You—secoundrel!" he panted. "At last! Move an inch and I'll kill you where you lie!" and his hands tightened upon the prostrate man's throat.

upon the prostrate man's throat.

Then—oh, irony of Fate!—came choking voice in response gurgling of "Mr—Mr. Neville! Good God! Is you? Don't you know me-Trale?" CHAPTER XXVII.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Neville staggered back, with a cry of astonishment and incredulity. It was too dark to see the face of the man he had been wrestling with, but there could be no mistaking his voice.

How on earth had Lavarick become exchanged for the inspector?

"Give me your hand, please, Mr. Neveralle," gasped Trale. "You've pretty nearly done for me, sir," and, assisted by ly done for me, sir," and, assisted by Neville, he struggled stiffly to his feet; and after a moment or two spent in rubbing his aching sides, struck a light. The two men stared at each other in the feeble glimmer as if they were each looking at a ghost.

"It is Mr. Neville!" exclaimed Trale, as "It is Mr. Neville!" exclaimed Trale, as if he could scarcely realize the fact. "How did you come here, and—oh, Lord, where's the candle?" he broke off.

He groped about and found what remained of the candle, and raised it above his head, looking round like a man in a dream.

Neville leaned against a tree, panting—hie himself was not far from "done"—and eyeing Trale with palpable disgust. "They're gone!—clean gone!" exclaimed Trale.

"Gone!" panted Neville. "of course."

"Gone!" panted Neville, "of course they have! What—what on earth were you doing here? And how did you come to mistake me——"

Trale interrupted him ruefully. Come to that, sir, how did you mis

"How could I do otherwise?" said Neville. Neville. "You weren't here when the candle went out."

"Oir, yes, I was, sir," said Trale. "I've been here for the last quarter of an hour or twenty minutes."

"What!" ejaculated Neville.

"Fact, Mr. Neville," said Trale, feeling his throat and chafing his numbed arms. "I was coming back here from the station, when I caught sight of a stranger making his way down the lane—an elderly man with a beard. There was something about him—I can't tell you what—that I didn't like, "and I thought I'd just see where he was going."

-that I didn't like, and I thought I'd just see where he was going."
"Yes-yes," said Neville quickly and impatiently.
"I fancied he might be going to the bank or the lawyer's—he looked like a clerl, but he didn't, and when I saw him turn pff to the Burrows it made me more curious than before. I followed him along the other side of the hedge, and managed to keep him within view without being seen when he got on to the Burrows. In the open I had to get down on my hands and knees and half-crawl after him, for he'd have seen me if he'd looked round. However, I kept him in sight until he'd entered the thicket here; then I skirted round and got in at the back of him and lay hidden among the bracken there," and he dewn on my hands and knees and halfcrawl after him, for he'd have seen me where Lavarick had sat.

wis I that put out the candle."
Neville started.

"I see!" he said. "I wish to heaven you had known that I was here! Together we should have managed to cap

Neville did not seem to hear him.

Victoria, B. C., Oct. 9.—Mr. Rudyard Kipling had an ovation at the luncheon of the Canadian Club to-day. So instent was the demand for admission that a large hall had to be secured and to the public galleries of this the lady guests of the club were admitted. Before Mr. Kipling had completed his first sentence the audience sprang to its feet and sang "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

After a charmingly-worded reference to the work of the men who had managed to "make of Victoria a magnificent city and at the same time to keep intact the magnificent treasure-house of its natural beauty," Mr. Kipling dwelt on immigration, and promised that on his return he would embody his views on Canada in some form. He contrasted the happy condition of the Canadian people with those of India. He then went on to point out the difference between Oriental and continental European immigration and settlers of British origin. Trale uttered a cry of delighted satusfaction.

In the one case the immigrants regarded law as a monster. They were born in fear and reared in the panic necessary to the race. It is not necessary, continued Mr. Kipling, to evolve an elaborate scheme of education to instruct the immigrant from Great Britain how to talk the English language or to teach his children the rudiments of citizenship. He knows that he may have to learn much and to unlearn much, but at last he will have the same powers and possibilities as yourselves much, but at last he will have the same powers and possibilities as yourselves and follow the same ideas even as your fathers did along lines that you know well. He seeks only room to develop his powers and his capabilities, and this room, I conceive, is offered in your vast Dominion.

room, I concerve, is offered in your assistance.

"It is possible that in your strength you may think that this is not an urgent question, but the time is coming when you will have to choose between the desired reinforcements of your own stock and blood and the undesired of races to whom you are strangers, whose speech you do not understand, and from whose instincts and traditions you are separated by thousands of years—that is your choice. For myself I think the time for making that choice is on you now." (Cheers.)

I shouldn't like to do him an injury—because he's your brother—and—and—" The poor fellow almost groaned under his disappointment. "I'm afraid we must collar this infernal Jim Banks without showing up Sir Jordan." Neville leaned against the tree and wiped away the perspiration that had started to his brow.
"By heaven, I—I had forgotten that for the moment!" he murmured. "Jordan, my brother, mixed up, hand and glove, with a scoundrel—a convict! What does it mean, Trale?"
Trale tapped Neville's breast, against which the will was lying.
"That will explain, Mr. Neville, if I'm not mistaken," he said, gravely. "That's the key to the whole business, depend upon it."
Neville nodded doubtfully. Will Not Have Any Associate Envoy, But His Private Secretary and Mrs. Lemieux May Accompany Him-Mr. Nosse Postpones His Trip.

Ottawa, Oct. 9.—An action for libel was entered at the Court House this morning by Mr. J. U. Vincent, barrister and a license commissioner, of the city of Ottawa, against Dr. R. H. Parent, first vice-président of the Conservative Association. According to the writ entered by Mr. Vincent, it is alleged that Dr. Parent on Tuesday, 8th October, made certain statements at a meeting of the executive of the Conservative Association which reflected on his character, and alleged that he had improperly used his position as License Commissioner. The Misses Wilkinson gave an enjoyable dance at the township hall, Barton. Twenty-five couple enjoyed the hospitality of the hostesses, who proved themselves to be very capable. The guests were received by Miss Bessie Wilkinson, who were cream silk and American were received by Miss Bessie Wilkinson, who wore cream silk and American beauty roses, and Miss Carrie, who wore a pale pink silk dress, embroidered with teneriffe lace, Among the ladies and gentlemen from the city were Misses L.
